Three Die, 11 Injured In Victoria Hotel Fire

Howl
For Help

By HUMPHRY DAVY
and LIZ HUGHES

"I opened the door, but the hallway was on fire," 95-year-old Harold Dawson said. "It started to burn down the door. I opened the window and started to howl for help."

Dawson was one of the dozens of Royal Olympic Hotel guests who narrowly escaped perishing in this morning's fire.

He said a fireman took him down a ladder.

"It was terrible," he said. "I can't remember too much. Everything happened so quickly."

Bill Williams, 25, of Victoria, was in his sixth floor room studying when the fire alarm went off.

He said today he left his room quickly and made for the fire escape on the fifth floor while smoke and flames engulfed the building.

He said once the fire hit it was like an explosion.

"It was the screaming, that's one thing I can't stand. It was sickening, all those screaming people burning," Williams said.

Williams said once he got out of the hotel he didn't stick around to watch, but went for coffee to calm down and later a room was found for him in the Yates Hotel.

He said the fire wouldn't stop him from living in the hotel again: "I figure my number wasn't up."

Fred Wilson occupied a room on the seventh floor and was awakened by the alarm.

"I thought it was a false alarm — some damn drunk," he said. "I got dressed but when I went out of my room, I smelled smoke."

He said he went to the fire escape and found a man standing there afraid to go down the steel stairs.

"Now and again, smoke would billow up and he was afraid to go through the smoke," he explained. "When the smoke cleared for a moment, I told him to proceed which he did. We got down all right."

He said from the street he could see a young man on the roof of the hotel screaming. "They got him down," he said.

Angus Patterson, 75, a veteran seaman, said he knew exactly what to do when he was awakened in his fourth floor room.

"I wrapped a towel around my head and made my way down the stairs," he said. "It was getting pretty hot when I reached the main floor."

"The main thing to do in a fire is to keep your head. If you don't, you make mistakes. I have had plenty of boat drills in my day and I know what to do."

Harry Southcott, who escaped from his fifth floor room in his pyjamas, said the smoke awakened him.

In darkness, he groped his way down one of the main stairways but on the third floor the smoke and heat forced him back.

"We went to the fire escape and found several elderly ladies standing there," he said. "They were afraid to go down. They had to be encouraged down the iron stairs."

Fred Thompson, 37, said when he stepped out of his room on the fourth floor, "everything was in a turmoil."

"People were rushing here and there, some screaming," he said. "I was in my nightgown. I finally managed to get to the fire escape and get down."

Hotel guests said it was a wonder more people did not die in the fire as several elderly people were hard of hearing and others lost or forgot.

QUERIED

By IAIN HUNTER
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Canada should postpone its proposed sale of a nuclear reactor to South Korea until that country guarantees it will not be used to make nuclear weapons, Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield and Allan McKinnon (PC-Victoria) declared Friday.

Both pressed Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau in the Commons for assurances that no country would get the Candu reactor without first agreeing to strict safeguards against using it for non-peaceful purposes.

McKinnon questioned the wisdom of the proposed sale to South Korea which he called "one of the most heavily-armed, militaristic and unstable countries in the world."

Meanwhile, North Korea was put on public notice today that an atomic attack might be the price it would have to pay for an invasion of the South.

The warning was issued at a Washington news conference by Defence Secretary James Schlesinger.

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal cost for providing police security at the Olympic Games in Montreal and Kingston will be at least $90 million, the Commons was told Friday.

U.S. Inflation Down

WASHINGTON (WP) — The rate of inflation in the U.S. continued to abate in May, even though there were steep increases in the price of gasoline and heat, the Department of Labor reported Friday. The 0.4 per cent rise in the consumer price index was below the 0.6 per cent advance in April and well below the 1 per cent that consumer prices rose in May, 1973, when inflation was rising at a double-digit pace.

PORT COQUITLAM (CP) — The body of one of two men suspected of trying to hold up a bank manager in the Fraser Canyon June 12 was found in the Pitt River near here Friday. RCMP said the body of Brian Ross Blanchard, 31, of Surrey, was found in the Pitt River, 150 miles south of the scene of the robbery.

Hotel, Motel Dwellers Get Tenant Protection

The provincial government has introduced legislation to extend protection under the Landlord Tenant Act to long-term residents of hotels and motels.

The provisions would be retroactive to Friday and give B.C. Rentalsman Barrie Clarke the power to fix rents for welfare recipients who live in hotels and motels.

The rentalsman could also overrule leases or rental agreements to decrease the rents if he is convinced the room is used as residential premises.

Contained in a Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act the measures are aimed at protecting motel and hotel residents on fixed incomes under the Social Assistance Act, Mincome, Handicapped Persons Income Assistance Act, Workers' Compensation benefits of the War Veterans allowance.

Single persons eligible for maximum welfare payments of $160 a month are also covered.

Acting on the recommendation of Human Resources Minister Norm Levi, the rentalsman may investigate a motel or motel operation, designate a room as residential accommodation.

He finds that a hotel or motel room has not been occupied for six months or the owner has no intentions of filling the vacancy, the rentalsman may designate it as residential premises and fix the rent.

Introduced by Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall, the legislation is designed to close a loophole that excluded motel and hotel residents from protection under the Landlord Tenant Act.

Increases over the fixed amount are "void and unenforceable" and if paid can be recovered by the occupant.

Hall described other measures in the Miscellaneous Statutes legislation as end-of-session housekeeping that includes:

Expansion of the B.C. Regional Hospital Districts' Financing Authority to extend borrowing powers to cover medical health facilities, health centres and social improvement facilities.

JAILHOUSE ROCKS

EL CENTRO, Calif. (UPI) — The Imperial Valley is quivering again. A swarm of 20 earthquakes shook the valley in a 29-hour period Thursday and Friday, setting off burglar alarms and bouncing the county jail, but doing no damage.

Swarms, as chains of quakes are called, are common here. Earlier this year the valley was shaken by a swarm of more than 1,000 quakes that lasted for days.

There were three tremors strong enough to be distinctly felt Thursday and three more Friday, accompanied by 14 smaller tremors.

"It shook my whole jail," said sheriff's Sgt. Tom Story after the strongest shake, which registered a moderate 4.2 on the Richter scale. "This is a fairly solid building but it was very noisy and jolting."

Paving Inquiry Sought

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Three people were killed and 11 injured early this morning when fire raged through the Royal Olympic Hotel, 642 Johnson.

Victoria police identified two of the dead as Elizabeth-Mae Towers, 20, of Trail, and Lorna Anne Minnes, 57, of Vancouver.

The name of the third — a 90-year-old man — is being withheld pending notification of next-of-kin.

The fire, which broke out in a second-floor room shortly before 2 a.m., quickly swept up an open staircase engulfing the top floors of the seven-story building.

Residents, awakened by thick smoke and intense heat were forced out of their rooms, many on to window ledges high above the street where they screamed for help.

An eyewitness said one man jumped from a third floor window to a roof 15 feet below, and was unhurt.

Others scrambled to safety down outside fire escapes and through smoke-filled hallways. But more than half the hotel's residents — estimated by manager Nick Renard at about 55 — were rescued by firemen using ladders.

Victoria city police detective Ted James described the scene as bedlam.

"It was a miracle the death toll wasn't much higher," he said.

Eleven of those rescued were taken to hospital suffering from smoke inhalation and burns.

Three were taken to Royal Jubilee — Douglas Mooney, 29, of Duncan, George Chen, 48, of Vancouver and William Kinsey, 51, who lived in Room 515 at the hotel.

The others were taken to Victoria General and included James Minnes, 62, of Vancouver, and Donald Ferris Towers, 26, of Trail, husbands of the dead women: Helen Peterson, 41, of 1803 Fernwood, Mabel Lindstrom of Vancouver, Albert Martel, Foulser, 49, and his husband Arthur, 54, both of St. Laurent, Quebec.

Mr. and Mrs. Foulser and Donald Towers were released following treatment for minor injuries.

Mooney, Chen and Kinsey are in satisfactory condition, Mrs. Lindstrom and Mrs. Peterson in good condition while Minnes, Smith and Martel are in fair condition.

It took 20 members of the Victoria fire department, assisted by an aerial truck from Oak Bay, more than an hour to bring the fire under control.

"We are deeply concerned about the results of this combining," he added.

Earlier, public works committee chairman Ald. Mike Young had implied that the action taken was not initiated by city council as a corporate body, but by the council members acting as individual concerned citizens.

Said Young: "Since council didn't pass a resolution in any way, shape or form it would be wrong to say council is looking into this but I think it would be fair to say that members of city council have taken proceedings such as are available to individual people under the Combines Act."

Young added: "There is no question we are concerned about the apparent lack of competition here . . . we are not getting competitive bids from the companies involved."

Section 7 of the Combines Investigation Act states that "any six persons . . . who are of the opinion that an offence under Part V has been or is about to be committed may apply to the Director for an inquiry into such matter."

The application must be accompanied by a statutory declaration stating, among other details, "the nature of the alleged offence and the names of the persons believed to be concerned therein and privy thereto."

Forest Union Talks Break

VANCOUVER (CP) — Negotiations with two of three forest industry unions broke off Friday after the coastal companies refused to increase the wages of employees beyond extending cost-of-living adjustment clauses in the previous contract.

He said the industry is faced with the problem of reconciling economic and long-term security and "accommodating union demands."

Meanwhile the Tahsis Co. Ltd. announced Friday it will close off all of its logging operations on the west coast of Vancouver Island for five weeks starting next Friday.

President J. V. Christensen said logging contractors working for the company have been advised to close during the same period as log inventories are in excess of current needs.

The announcement affects 350 company loggers but there was no estimate on how many are employed by contractors who are independent businessmen.

got their glasses in the rush to escape.

One man pounded on the doors of some guests to awaken them.

"They couldn't hear," he said. "I saw one old man. He couldn't see without his glasses. I understand he got out. Someone helped him."

When the fire was quelled a 70-year-old resident of the hotel picked her way through the charred debris back to her room and found everything just as she had left it — except there was no door, no floor covering and her slippers had been burned to a crisp.

The woman, who asked not to be named because she had not yet contacted her children to tell them she was all right, had escaped the burning building about two hours earlier, hurrying down the fire escape with others on the second floor where the fire had started.

She said she was awakened at about 2 a.m. by the fire alarm.

She rushed out to the hallway and "saw all this smoke billowing towards me. I ran back to my room and picked up my dressing gown and my purse and said to myself, 'I'm getting out of here!'"

She said men were running up and down the hall and she followed some of them to the fire escape door and climbed down.

As she was climbing down she looked back into the building and saw the hallway she had just left engulfed by roaring flames.

"You tell everyone that I thank God I'm alive. I just thank God," she said this morning, sitting in the lobby of the Yates Hotel where she had been taken to spend what was left of the night.

She said as she was standing in the street outside the burning hotel, huddled with about 50 of the other hotel residents, two young boys were circulating in the crowd, "singing and smiling."

"It was so cold out there. I was just shivering and couldn't stop and those two boys were so nice. They went away somewhere and when they came back they brought me a big blanket and wrapped it around me."

"That blanket saved my life. I just wish I knew who those boys were," she said.

Woman Credit Guides Change

VANCOUVER (CP) — If guidelines ready for distribution to more than 4,000 credit-granting agencies in British Columbia are followed, women will have the same credit opportunities as men, Phyllis Young, minister of consumer services, said Friday.

In a convocation address to the B.C. Institute of Technology, Ms. Young said the guidelines were prepared by the Credit Grantors association of Vancouver.

The proposals, which are not mandatory:

No married or unmarried woman should be denied credit in her own name if a man with the same earnings and property would get credit.

Credit agencies should provide, when requested, the credit history of each spouse and the joint accounts if the information is on file.

Agencies should not refuse to consider the wife's income when considering a couple applying for credit.

Agencies should not refuse to extend credit to the newly divorced, separated or widowed woman solely because of her new status.

Agencies should not refuse to consider alimony or child support as valid sources of income without considering the merits of the application.

Agencies should not apply stricter standards to credit applications when the wife, rather than the husband is the primary supporter of the family.

Companies should not ask information about birth control practices.

Agencies should not alter an individual's credit on the basis of the credit rating of the spouse.

Companies should not insist on bargaining with the husband, rather than the wife.

Ken Downie, secretary of the association and manager of the Credit Grantors Association of Vancouver, said the guidelines would be mailed to 2,000 association members in Vancouver, and about 2,000 non-association members engaged in granting credit throughout the province.

"Although these are not members, we expect they will choose to follow along," Downie said.

The recommendations are also being sent to out-of-province credit companies, such as major chain stores, he said.

STUDENT PROTESTERS from Burnaby Friday demonstrated against a lack of provincial government action on the Indian land claims issue. The high school students presented a petition with 3,000 Vancouver and Burnaby signatures to Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall, asking that the government give higher priority to the native Indians' claims and requesting that a statue of Nootka Indian chief Maquinna be erected on the front lawn of the Legislative Buildings beside Queen Victoria.

Bikeway Test Target Date Set

Tentative routes for a capital region bikeway will be submitted to a study committee meeting Wednesday as a step toward inaugurating a test route by July 23.

Capital Region Bikeway Study Committee Thursday named regional planner Alan LeFevre as temporary chairman and set up a target schedule and a sub-committee to examine sources of revenue.

One of the original advocates of a bikeway, Ald. Joe Bourque, of Saanich, said the meeting decided all Greater Victoria municipalities should be represented and invitations will go out to Central Saanich, North Saanich and Sidney before the next meeting.

Oak Bay, Victoria, Esquimalt and Saanich are represented technically, along with planning and engineering people of the regional district and highways department.

Using funds provided by the provincial works department and Community Planning Association of Canada Victoria chapter, two university students have been hired to work for three months beginning in July preparing a report for the committee.

This will tell who rides bicycles, when and where, as well as determine feasibility of connecting existing paths, roads and rights of way as they may be outlined in the tentative routes.

Bourque said it is hoped a model bikeway may be set out as a commuter route for demonstration to the committee.

It was agreed the bikeway study should remain the responsibility of capital regional district and municipal councils, who should ensure that individuals have a reasonable option of their transport mode.

Bourque said the only option to public transit at present is the private automobile, and that is "ridiculous."

He said the committee was encouraged by a suggestion from Highways Minister Graham Len to seek one-third funding of bike-way projects from the provincial Community Recreation Facilities Fund.

Charles Barber, another supporter of the concept, was named chairman of the subcommittee to investigate prospective funding such as through Opportunities for Youth grants.

Bourque said the committee drew up a list of community resources from which expertise might be gained, including school trustees, University of Victoria, police departments, aldermen, Capital Region Safety Council, the Medical Association of Lower Vancouver Island, and private individuals or firms such as Orme and Levinson architectural and planning company, which has offered its services.

They said they had "snorted" one of the "papers" of cocaine and defence counsel Bob Buffam asked if it would be reasonable, having paid $20 per paper, to expect the accused to deal it at the same price.

He also commented that

RCMP Const. Douglas Morrison, who was looking through the kitchen window for half an hour, could only remember the words "coke"

GUILTY DRUG VERDICT

Twenty-six-year-old Mark Graham Murray, 1750 Chambers, was found guilty in county court Friday of possession of cocaine for the purpose of trafficking March 13, 1974.

Judge Montague Drake will sentence Murray July 11 after receiving a pre-sentence report.

Judge Drake said there was "absolutely no question" about Murray possessing cocaine and he found "compelling" evidence that money changed hands or was put on a table where it could change hands and the accused went outside to where the cocaine was hidden at 1046 North Park.

Trafficking, he noted, includes an offer to sell among its definitions.

Prosecutor Mike Hutchison said there could be "no conceivable reason" for the narcotics to be taken from its hiding place if not for the $60 placed on the kitchen table by a visitor to the house, Brian Hamilton Watson.

Witnesses Patty Moore, Owen Peters and Brenda Peters said they and Murray lived in the house and had jointly purchased four "papers" of cocaine a few days earlier for their own use or $80.

Olivares Stops Champ in Second

LOS ANGELES (Reuter) — Mexican's Ruben Olivares pounded champion Bobby Chacon to the mat twice for a knockout in the second round of a 15-round fight Friday night to regain the World Boxing Council featherweight title.

Trafficking, he noted, includes an offer to sell among its definitions.

Prosecutor Mike Hutchison said there could be "no conceivable reason" for the narcotics to be taken from its hiding place if not for the $60 placed on the kitchen table by a visitor to the house, Brian Hamilton Watson.

FIRST WOMAN PRIEST

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two women deacons in the Anglican diocese of New Westminster—stretching from Powell River to Hope—reacted with delight to the acceptance Wednesday by the Anglican Church of Canada of ordination of women to the priesthood.

Beebe was convicted by a five-member ecclesiastical court of violating canon law, and defying his bishop by inviting two irregularly ordained women priests to celebrate communion at Christ Church in Oberlin last Dec. 8.

The court recommended to Bishop John Burt of the Episcopal Diocese of Ohio that Beebe be admonished for his acts. They added that if he repeats his actions, Beebe should be suspended until he is ready to certify with the bishop that he will comply.

But Beebe said he won't be susceptible to threats because he is acting out of conscience in allowing the women to celebrate the Eucharist at his church.

Sports and Gambling

Suggestions that the western Canada lottery might not be such a profitable venture for the four sponsoring western provinces after all surfaced this week. Conservative leader Scott Wallace asked Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall if the government had to transfer money from general revenues to the lottery, and when the lottery's first annual report — due March 31 — would be forthcoming.

The reply on both queries was that Hall took them as notice, meaning he might answer at some future date. While it is a bit premature to make flat statements about the success or failure of the year-old experiment in funding sports and cultural activities, early figures seem to indicate a steady downward trend, although original estimates of lottery profits are just about bang on.

Some 812,000 tickets were sold in B.C. for the first draw last November, earning the province a net profit of $658,558. The second lottery draw in February this year had 755,000 B.C. tickets in it.

Start-up costs for the B.C. lottery organization meant the profit on that lottery was just $459,000. Sales for the most recent draw last month totalled 726,244 tickets in B.C., another decline on the February lottery. Profits for the third draw haven't been added up yet.

It's a similar picture in the other provinces. Total ticket sales in western provinces went from 2,273,000 on the first to 2,135,000 on the second and 2,107,000 on the third. On this most recent one, sales in Manitoba and Alberta (where the lottery just broke even on the first draw) were up but in Saskatchewan they dropped.

An indication of the state of the western lottery are the continuing discussions among provincial officials on changing the prize set-up. It's been suggested that the price be boosted to $3 a ticket and the extra 50 cents used for a mammoth $1 million prize. Lottery officials acknowledge the drawing power of the Olympic lottery's similar big prize.

If the western lottery experiment doesn't work out, it won't be the only failure on the continent. South of the border, lotteries and kindred ventures like legalized off-track betting have produced revenues for the sponsoring governments far lower than originally estimated.

But instead of cutting their losses, state administrations decided to diversify. New Jersey recently licensed the numbers racket and New York city's Off-Track Betting Corp. reportedly has made a $60-million offer for Madison Square Garden, arousing speculation that OTB wants to branch out from the ponies into betting on all kinds of organized sports. Illegal but widespread, betting with the bookies on basketball, football and hockey runs into the billions of dollars. Government officials see only big dollar signs.

The present economic squeeze on professional sports may make Clarence Campbell and Jake Gaudreau and Pete Rozelle change their minds too. After all, how much excited interest would there be in a B.C. Lions football game without a side bet against the odds or point spread?

For one editor to interview another is an incestuous exercise. But Laurent Laplante is unique in that he is editor of Montreal's Le Jour, the only separatist daily in Canada.

A former director of public information for the Bourassa government, the 41-year-old newsmen is not a member of the Parti Québécois. In print or on the podium he often disagrees with René Lévesque. Like most news people he is a bundle of inconsistencies and something of an idealist.

In Victoria last week as a delegate to the national legal aid conference he agreed to talk.

Le Jour first invaded English Canada's consciousness when Energy Minister Donald Macdonald refused to place conservation ads in the separatist tabloid. Laplante recalled the event without rancor, smiling ironically about how the English language Montreal dailies were far more outraged than their French counterparts over Ottawa's discrimination.

A 15-year veteran of newspapers, he is quietly proud of Le Jour's organization. The non-union paper has its own editorial society which makes all staffing decisions. From editor-in-chief down to copy boy, the society can veto anything that concerns the writing or direction of the 25,000-circulation paper.

No Separatist Fanatic

Editorial policy is naturally slanted towards Quebec independence, although Laplante is emphatic that news coverage is objective and straight down the middle.

The soft-spoken balding man, who favors three-piece suits, is not fanatical partisan of the Parti Québécois. Instead he exudes a low-key confidence that some form of separation in Quebec is unavoidable. English-speaking Canadians are becoming more reconciled to this point of view, he believes.

"I would hate to treat the rest of Canada the way we feel like treating the Americans. Nobody in Quebec feels like building a frontier between Quebec and Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes. But the association must be different," Laplante insists.

Because of economic and political factors he refuses to put any timetable on eventual separation, even qualifying the word separation by saying that complete independence may never come.

Still, he credits Lévesque's strategy as being the only road to power. In the last provincial election the PQ's aim was to decimate the Union Nationale and Creditiste parties. Now that the separatists are the official opposition they feel their turn will come sooner or later.

"He feels that the PQ leader is becoming less and less a socialist as time goes on. In an independent Quebec Laplante says there might be some mildly socialist measures — 'not Marxist mind you' — such as the Barrett government has introduced. But the Quebecois want to solve the national problem before they even consider an independent ideological bent.

"If we had an independent Quebec I'm sure before long it would be a left-wing government," he said.

Left-wing in relation to what, I later wondered. In an interesting aside, Laplante expressed a sentiment echoed throughout B.C. and the prairies in these unsettled times.

"We feel we've been cheated in many ways . . . Ontario is the only province to enjoy two governments. They strictly own the federal government. That's the reaction in Quebec."

If there was a parting of ways between Quebec and Canada, Laplante feels we all have something to lose. He believes the new resigned attitude of many English-Canadians may result in meaningful negotiations for an associated state. But he does not doubt the resolve of his people.

Possibility of Violence

"I think violence would come back if Quebec were to receive a popular vote favorable to independence and then Ottawa refused to negotiate anything . . . Then you will have a legitimate mandate that can't be applied."

I stared at this calm, gentle man. There we were, pouring coffee and eating toast, animatedly discussing politics, strategy and tactics as only two newspapermen can. He and I had more in common than either of us would have with a French or British counterpart. Yet we were actively working each day for opposite ends.

At one point I tried to explain why I would like to see Canada stay together. He listened politely, agreeing that a divided country would allow the U.S. to dictate harsher terms about our national resources.

In the end we were left blinking at one another across a gulf of 200 years of solitude, injustice and historical indifference.

"They hide their colors. They don't want to scare people. Lévesque doesn't want any mention of ideology. He wants

Economic Barometer

It's only four months since Premier Dave Barrett told us in his annual budget speech that the provincial economy should start to turn up just about now. While there have been no recent economic reports on the state of British Columbia's economic health, no hard statistics, there have been some signs that the premier's claim of February was sheer hope. A wetted finger held aloft will give an indication of the wind's direction, some recent statements by provincial cabinet ministers would seem to show rapidly declining barometric pressure.

Human Resources Minister Norman Levi, for example, told a conference of social workers last weekend that it did no good to keep pleading for more and more money to be pumped into social welfare programs, that there was a limit to spending.

And on Tuesday, Highways Minister Graham Lea spoke to something called the Highway Environment Conference in Vancouver, bemoaning public expectations of "monumental proportions" and talking of "the greed of man." He was talking ecology but the lesson won't be lost on provincial government employees either.

"We are going to have to abandon the fallacy that there is unlimited wealth in the land . . . It is time for discipline . . . the need for restraint must be recognized at this time, even within socialist objectives, if the real goals of the working class are to be achieved," said Lea.

If dyed-in-the-wool socialists are talking like this, you know things are bad.

Wheeling and Dealing

There is no lack of honest and moderate men and women among the chief members of the Labor party, and with the inevitable lack of leadership from Mr. Wilson, who will concentrate as usual on his political wheeling-dealing, it is up to them to provide the voice and the inspiration that is needed."

Equally incessant voices from the left are urging him to keep all the cabinet members who opposed him and stick to the policies that have contributed to the crisis, but he puffs on his pipe and informs the British people, who can now hear him live on radio from the House of Commons, that he will make up his mind in time.

Nobody listening to all this can doubt the vitality of British democracy or the boldness of its political and press debate, and it may be a little early to decide that Wilson will go on as before.

He has read the election returns like everybody else, and the inflation and production figures too, so nothing is "inevitable" here after the referendum.

Wilson has a chance not only to go into Europe but to help lead it, and he might just take it.

Accordingly, the mood here, even after the non-partisan success of the moderates in the European referendum, is not only grim, but melancholy, as if this historic decision meant nothing.

"Once upon a time," the Sunday Times observed, "The British had stiff upper lips. They met triumphs with indifference and setbacks with disdain. Over the years, this famous quality was lost. It is going to fight the inflation with an austerity program that will increase unemployment and infuriate the unions, or appease the union leaders and others who voted no on Europe?"

In short, he is being asked whether he is a big enough man to handle his mandate, a national leader or a party manipulator?

President Gerald Ford has his difficulties in the U.S. with inflation and cabinet squabbles over fixing prices on commodities.

On a more mundane level, with inflation running here at 25 per cent, even the workers with their higher pay can't keep up with the prices. A two-ounce tin of Erimore mixture pipe tobacco costs about $2.75, and if you want to be fancy, or are on an expense account, a double room at the Savoy hotel costs over $90 a night.

Now Is Time for All Good Party Men to See World

Travel is broadening but politics is better. There is something about politicians, once in power, that moves them to race to the nearest branch of Thos. Cook. For some reason, they think it is up to the taxpayer to make up for their neglected education. Join the navy and see the world? Better still, join the NDP and see it by first-class jet.

If you look at the travel budget of the NDP, there is some small suspicion that a number of Mr. Barrett's merry band do indeed feel deep in their hearts that they are good for only one term — so it's a sprint to Vancouver International Airport to see who can see the globe first.

With ministers scattering to the winds once again before the session is closed — Premier Barrett and Attorney-General Alex Macdonald to England, Economic Development Minister Gary Lauk to Sweden, Speaker Gordon Dowding to a parliamentary meeting in Quebec — it is pertinent to do a little investigation into the truly remarkable travel record piled up by this government in less than three years. One of the problems is that the information is hard to find but even if incomplete, take a look:

Premier Barrett: Last federal budget he was in Hawaii; this federal budget he'll be in Britain. This is the lad, remember, who on achieving power in 1972 had never been to Montreal, let alone outside the country. In 1973, he went to England had tea with the Queen and continued on to Paris, Dusseldorf, Bonn, Frankfurt, Munich, Vienna and Amsterdam.

In early 1974 he went to Japan and called in at Hong Kong. Six months later he was back in Hong Kong on the way to China. Aside from his legitimate trips to Washington, New York and Ottawa, he's been to Nova Scotia to campaign in an NDP byelection and St. Louis to accept an honorary degree. Now he's back in Britain.

Health Minister Dennis Cocke: To Hong Kong and China in 1975, Hawaii on the way back.

Education Minister Eileen Daily: At the invitation of Ottawa to a 1973 education conference in Paris and another in Britain.

Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall: To Britain in 1973 "to study pulp markets." It's amazing how many people have relatives near pulp markets.

Labor Minister Bill King: To an international labor convention in the U.S., fair enough, and a holiday in Hawaii.

Economic Development Minister Gary Lauk: To the U.S. in his first year to study the legislative process. In 1974 to Japan and Hong Kong. Now he's off to Sweden to "Study experiences in promoting viable communities in less-developed areas and decentralization of population."

By ALLAN

Human Resources Minister Levi: A 1973 trip to London, Holland, Sweden, Germany, Switzerland and Israel.

Municipal Affairs Minister Jim Lorimer: In 1974, off to France, England, Germany, Switzerland and Yugoslavia "to study transportation systems in general and inspect buses."

— Attorney-General Alex Macdonald: He likes to catch Wimbledon and, after touring China last fall, now has the good luck to be in London with Barrett just in time to stumble upon Wimbledon again.

Housing Minister Lorne Nicolson: In 1974 was away on the silver bird to Sweden, again.

Norway and Finland to view housing developments.

Mines Minister Leo Nimsick: To England (coal conference), to Liberia in Africa, to Germany (reclamation processes), to Italy (geothermal plants).

Recreation and Conservation Minister Jack Radford: He, too, made it quietly to Europe last year — to Germany to inspect wildlife management areas and then stopped in for a similar foray in Britain.

Transport Minister Bob Strachan: Yet another 1974 visitor to London.

Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich: All he could manage was to Japan on a Japan Air Lines inaugural flight.

Resources Minister Bob Williams: To Finland in 1973, to Belgium in 1974, plus the jaunts to Washington. Last week he was in Madison, Wis.

Consumer Affairs Phyllis Young: To Australia in March to study consumer affairs for three weeks.

Don't think sharing the goodies stops with the cabinet. Backbench MLAs the premier wishes to favor — or shake for a while — also get in on it.

... travelling champ

Speaker Gordon Dowding, the fastest air line ticket in the west. He has visited India and inspected "the grandmother of parliaments" in Iceland. Has done London of course. Attended the Commonwealth Conference in Sri Lanka. He was down in Arizona, doing God knows what. I looked up at the Ottawa Press Gallery reception a few months back and there was the familiar face of Speaker Dowding. Now he's off in Quebec City with a parliamentary group, his legislature still not closed down in Victoria.

One of the cliché charges against socialists is that once in power they act like children who've broken into the candy store. That's an over-cynical view but the NDP in Victoria, by its rather casual nature, tends to encourage such a charge. I'm getting bored repeating it, but the good works of this government are in danger of being completely obscured by the excesses of its style and enthusiastic fumbling. Unless it curbs its eager transcontinental boondoggles, the Barrett regime will become known as Around the World in 40 Ways.

'Good to Get Back to Pester Salesmen'

By JOHN BURNS

(Burns left Peking this month after four years as the China correspondent of The Globe and Mail)

HONG KONG — The name means fragrant harbor, but the first thing that strikes a traveller crossing into this colony from China is the smell — of humanity, of refuse, of freight cars loaded down with animals for the slaughterhouses down the line.

Against the cleanliness and unspoiled air back across the frontier, beyond the Chinese soldiers with their khaki sneakers and automatic rifles, it is a manifest of the gulf that communism and capitalism have opened up between two parts of what was once a single China.

The contrasts are multiple, and complex. After living for years in a country where newspapers print only what suits the Communist party, it is almost a luxury to be pestered the moment you step across the frontier by small boys and wizened old ladies competing with each other to sell local papers with headlines such as "Mao Frail — Who Comes After?" and photographs of scantily clad starlets. The mind jars for a moment, then fixes on the refrain in the folk song about freedom being just another word for nothing left to lose. Ah, you think, how facile, how wrong.

You buy a paper, for double its newsstand price of a Hong Kong dollar (20 cents) and then you see it: Beside the masthead, in heavy type, the legend "Complimentary Copy."

What you are looking at is another face of capitalism, for the legend tells you that the paper has been recycled — delivered to a China-bound traveller in his hotel room that morning, ready by him on the train up to the border, collected by hawkers from the seat where he left it, refolded, smoothed flat and sold for a clear profit.

In China they would call it profiteering and reward it with a dose of re-education, or worse.

To a conscience infused with a sense of dignity and self-worth that communism seems to have given to the ordinary man beyond the frontier, it seems demeaning. But in Hong Kong they call it enterprise — and point to the men who started like that, in overcrowded tenements in near-slum areas like Wan-chai, and went on to build fortunes that are reinvested now in everything from Vancouver estate to iron ore mines in Australia.

The 90-mile train ride from the southern China city of Canton to the border point of Shum Chun is an idyll, the spotless air-conditioned cars affording an unobstructed view over a landscape that seems to have been gardened.

On certain fairways, a slice lands a player's ball squarely in one of the tiny, family-tended plots that constitute the bulk of the colony's agriculture, or perchance on the roof of one of the tarpaper-and-corrugated-iron shacks which serve as homes to many of the poorest families.

In the men's bar at the clubhouse, British army subalterns while away the hours playing liar dice, summoning up their gin-and-tonics with a flick of the finger toward the white-jacketed Chinese waiters, some of them twice their age: Boy.

Past the golf club and the dozens of tanneries that border the railway line farther south, giving off a foul odor, the train enters the suburbs of Kowloon. Here the contrasts multiply: The traffic jams, with their attendant pollution and noise; the mass of humanity, with whole families crowded into single rooms in cheek-by-jowl tenements; the commercialization, with neon signs and painted shingles shouting their messages from a million storefronts; all of it, emblematic of the capital ethos, assaults senses accustomed to Chinese cities where the most persistent noise is the tinkling of bicycle-bells, where the side-walks are rarely as densely crowded, and where the only advertising permitted, apart from discreet storefront shingles, is political-red-and-white slogan boards, at intersections, bearing quotations from Mao.

Against all this, there is still much that speaks in Hong Kong's favor: There are the hotels, clean, efficient and modern, a welcome change from the creakily run hosteries across the border, where cockroaches await the visitor in dark, dank bathrooms, and where it can take half an hour to get a society of revolutionary China.

In half a decade, and notwithstanding the disincentive to invest in Hong Kong's uncertain political future, represents the physical aspect of Hong Kong has changed dramatically. While a visitor to Canton has to strain to see evidence of change since his last visit, a traveller has only to be gone from Hong Kong for six months for another 30-storey skyscraper to appear on the waterfront.

Whether this represents real progress in human terms is a question that the people of Hong Kong seem content to leave to posterity; besides, the strictly material indices of progress — new buildings, new roads, increased prosperity — are precisely those that are most often cited to visitors across the border, where material growth is so much slower.

There is, too, the sense of dynamism, of growth and change, that contrasts strongly with the relatively static no closer to describing the noise of a Varied Thrush. Their audiograms were no better than their competitors' words.

But since words are our main means of communication, words we must live with. So, when the bacon and eggs had met their appointed fate, I fell back on the old "I'll let you know when we hear one."

A few minutes later the party broke up; some heading out onto the bosom of the Pacific for a day with albatrosses and shearwaters; some off to Cleland Island for a face-to-face confrontation with Rhinoceros Auklets, some for a walk along the Rain Forest Trail with the Park Naturalists and some — my group — for a few hours on Vargas Island drinking in the history, both human and natural, of this guardian of Clayoquot Sound.

The discussion got underway with a Winnipegger expressing a wish to see a Varied Thrush and one of us saying he wasn't likely to "see" one but he might hear one. From there it was off at all to the debate on just what a Varied Thrush sounded like.

The problem was to describe the undescribable. Short of "it's unmistakable" or an evasive "when you hear it, you'll know it" we were getting nowhere.

Then the inevitable bird books were produced.

From Roger Tory Peterson we got "a long, eerie, quavering whistle" which might be fine if you've never heard a Varied Thrush but to one who has, "quavering" and "whistle" just did not do justice to the sound. I knew what Peter was getting at but his choice of words wasn't right.

But Earl Godfrey, in Birds of Canada, apparently thought they were, or at least "whistle" was. His eerie, resonant, whistle, in various pitches, often in a minor key" got a little closer to the quality of the sound but not to the sound itself.

Richard Pough, in one of his Audubon guides, was persistently subjective at least. He offered "a long, resonant, melancholy and strangely beautiful" to compound the confusion.

Turning to Zim and his cohorts, in Birds of North America, we found a graphic representation of the so-called song which, aside from being at least an original idea, got us

Let's Hear It for Donald Jack

By PAT BARCLAY

Well, here goes nothing again. Native caution warns me to stay calm, cool and mealy-mouthed (or "objective", "dispassionate" and "judicious", if you'd rather), but it's no use. A good book is an exciting event. But a very good one — well, I'd better stop burling, and tell you all about it.

In April of 1973, you may remember, this column reviewed the first two volumes of The Bandy Papers, by Donald Jack. (Three Cheers for Me, Volume I, and That's Me in the Middle, Volume II) After describing their author's vicissitudinous career (Three Cheers for Me was originally published and well received in 1962, then allowed to languish out of print for years, and finally refurbished and re-issued along with its sequel in 1973), the column went on to praise Three Cheers for Me as a "major achievement" and a serious, albeit slightly flawed, contender for the title of The Great Canadian Novel.

What was so impressive about both Bandy novels was their humor, characterization and meticulous attention to detail. (Their hero, young Lieutenant Bartholomew Bandy of Leamington, Ontario, joins the Royal Flying Corps in 1916 after a misadventurous spell in the light infantry. Jack's descriptions of trench and air warfare are wonderfully convincing and well worth the price of the book on their own.)

What some reviewers objected to was Jack's apparent unconcern with matters literary. Three Cheers for Me was an entertaining and witty yarn, but it wasn't meaningful, you know? Worse, it was persistently cheerful in tone, whereas everybody knows that good Canadian writing is by definition sombre, earnest, cynical and/or downright gloomy. Jack's few references to the harsh realities of war were largely ignored, his sly digs at Canadian hypocrisy passed over.

Now, however, with the publication of It's Me Again, Volume III of The Bandy Papers, we can see emerging the outline of a very high novelistic purpose indeed.

It's Me Again takes up the Bandy saga in France near Amiens where Major Bandy has just been posted to the command of a squadron of 5F1 Dolphins. (In typical Bandy fashion he runs over his general straightaway: "I drove on for another hundred yards or so, stopped the car, thought for a moment, then backed up, and pulling carefully alongside him, called out, 'Sir! Sir! Can you tell me the way to my squadron?")

The novel continues in this vein until Dick Milestone, one of Bandy's closest friends, is shot down. At this point our hero begins a dogged campaign to persuade "the brass" to issue parachutes. (The link with Milestone is never stressed, incidentally. One of Bandy's more prominent traits is his emotional restraint. A similar penchant for understatement affects Donald Jack, and to perceive the breadth of his intentions one must read between the lines.)

Finally Bandy discovers that the best available parachute design lost its chance with the Air Ministry because some "pompous, interfering bonehead" squashed it. That "bonehead" was himself. This news, coupled with the discovery that his recent badgering has resulted in a highly accident-prone, parachute being issued to all squadrons, convinces him that "human endeavor is pretty absurd."

His opinion is obviously shared by Donald Jack, who must know more about the absurdities of the First World War by now than almost any living person. Occasionally he will sound a clear note of anger, as in: "The Church's apparently wholehearted approval of the slaughter"; or in: "At Plesetskaya we found some people who'd had their hands plunged into boiling water, so the Reds could amuse themselves by stripping off the skin" — "The Whites have committed atrocities as well." "Not just because their victims were property owners." But generally he is content to expose the follies of men at war at a leisurely, good-humored pace.

Volume III ends with General Bandy's return home in 1920. A dust jacket note informs us that Jack is currently planning yet another sequel. As Bandy is only 26 in 1920, we could well be in for as many sequels as Jack sees fit to produce.

Increases in quantity are seldom accompanied by an increase in quality, but that's just what seems to be happening with the novels of Donald Jack. At this point in time he seems well on his way to compiling a comic version of War and Peace, a peculiarly Canadian contribution to the fictionalized history of modern Western man.

For Bartholomew Bandy is peculiarly and hopelessly Canadian. This attribute, which wreaks havoc in his sex life and justifies any eccentricity in the eyes of his fellow men, serves him well in his capacity as an observer of the wartime European scene. Someone once remarked that "the only criticism of absurdity is to describe it." For proof of this statement, we need only look to the hugely entertaining, mock-epic novels of Donald Jack.

Reading It's Me Again left me with two burning ambitions. One is to read them all some day, when the saga is complete, on one glorious, Bandy-soaked binge. The other is to see them made into a film, starring the one actor in the world who seems to me to have been born to play Bartholomew Bandy — Mr. Donald Sutherland.

Canada's Film Makers

By NORA HUTCHISON

Is there a distinctly Canadian film industry and, more importantly, an audience to support it? John Hofseß, the breezy and incisive movie critic for Maclean's magazine thinks so, and in this book he interviews 10 Canadian filmmakers, "dreamers of independent mind and unique vision", who he believes are its prime movers and shapers.

The book begins with a lengthy introduction in which

INNER VIEWS, by John Hofseß. McGraw-Hill, $8.95.

Hofseß outlines the history of the Canadian film industry, then examines the two major problems besetting feature film production in this country: how to make a commercially viable film that adequately reflects a national consciousness or identity.

It is technically possible for

JUTRA... nudging the heart

But creating an artistic and commercial success is another and more difficult matter. Canadian filmmakers need to make films that "travel well" because, as Hofseß points out, "a Canadian film must gross 5 times its cost to break even." And just as any film has to fulfill "some psychological need... have some sociological purpose" or it will have no market or value, Canadian films have to meet the Canadian movie market's demand for a separate cultural experience.

Hofseß suggests that if Canadian filmmakers can satisfy their audience's demands (and admittedly, it's a minority audience still) for the cinematic reflections of a "separate culture," they may be able to create a commercially popular and profitable Canadian cinema. He regards the filmmakers interviewed in the book as the boldest and most original of Canadian movie-makers — the key contributors toward a national film culture. They include Pierre Bernon (The National Dream), Claude Jutra (Mon Oncle Antoine, Kamouraska), Alan King (Warrendale, A Married Couple, Denys Arcand), Jeanne Padoa, Gina), Paul Almond (Act of the Heart, Journey), William Frucht (Wedding in White), Frank Vitali (Montreal Main, Don Shebib (Goin' Down the Road), Graeme Ferguson (North of Superior) and Jack Darcus (Wolfpen Principle). We are familiar with the work of several of these filmmakers; the others seldom get their films screened outside Quebec or Ontario.

Hofseß's book is good — in fact, the best yet to deal with the Canadian film. The interviews not only provide us with valuable insights into the work of recognized directors but also introduce us to filmmakers whose work we should look for. Hofseß invites each of the filmmakers to relate his perceptions of his art and craft within and without the national cultural framework. The resulting interviews are penetrating discussions of the joys and woes of filmmaking. For the reader, these filmmakers begin to take on the aspect of cultural heroes, battling impossible odds to present their art to the people.

Perhaps the most interesting interview is with Jutra, certainly one of Canada's best filmmakers. It was Jutra's first film, A Tout Prendre, Hofseß tells us, that awakened him to the possibilities of a Canadian film industry. Jutra's films have had a profound effect upon the direction of Canadian film. He has been able to make high-quality films on low budgets that "travel well" — interprovincially and internationally. Jutra views himself as a subtle, visually articulate and compassionate director. Although his films are apolitical, Hofseß notes that they bear "a cultural sensibility that is distinctly Quebecois." Jutra says of his work: "I'm not a vulgarizer. I like films that have what might be called a complicated sympathy for human characters of all stripes. By complicated sympathy, I mean sophisticated compassion, not just sentimentality and certainly not tears. The heart should be nudged but not jugged."

Inner Views has been put together by an enthusiastic and concerned critic of Canadian film. It's a must for anyone who cares about the growth of our cultural identity.

Style Conquers Content

When John Metcalf writes a good story he can be devastating. When he writes a bad one, he can still sometimes get by because his craft covers a multitude of sins.

That in a nutshell is the genuine shock. The rest are more or less pot-boilers, but the author's clean and polished style often makes them bearable.

In Metcalf's best stories, main characters are artists like himself. In the very best of them, the reader meets Jim Haine, a somewhat classic Montreal poet whose income derives from Canada Council grants, silly public readings, dealing dogs and breeding rare tropical fish.

Haine is not, however, a

The remainder of the book is less powerful, although Metcalf's smooth, poised style often keeps the reader interested. He also has enough wit to make a boring plot intermittently funny.

One Hemingwayish story is about youthful loss of innocence, and another that reminds me vaguely of John Updike's work is about a teacher upended by the education system. In one called Beryl, two young people at different stages of sexual advancement get together and the outcome is predictably disastrous.

The ironic note on which the story ends (still in the back seat) is simply great: For me, Metcalf has come up with one of the best portrayals of the modern, swinging literary "scene" ever written in Canada and does just that.

The ironic note on which the story ends (still in the back seat) is simply great: For me, Metcalf has come up with one of the best portrayals of the modern, swinging literary "scene" ever written in Canada and does just that.

The other story that impressed me is about an actor playing the lead role at a Fredericton theatre. The story very craftily revolves around the issue of infidelity, and how one partner in a marriage can become obsessed by distrust of the other. There is nothing too original here, but Metcalf gets real mileage from his material.

After these, Metcalf petered out. So much so that even his style fails to salvage the remaining stories from being tedious and boring.

On the whole this is an uneven collection, which at times struck me as stretching too little material. But there are two stories here that are first-rate, and for them alone, the whole book may be worth a go.

The Church as the Enemy In Revolutionary Cuba

By JACK SCOTT

Ernesto Cardenal is all but obsessed with the fact that the Catholic Church of Cuba blandly accepted the nation's agonies under the dictatorship of Batista and has remained implacably hostile for some 16 years to the reforms of Fidel Castro and his revolutionary government.

He writes of celebrating Mass in a Cuban church in 1970: "I feel that I am 'celebrating a false rite in a seat, and that true Christianity is outside. Seeing the small attendance, the mournful faces, I think: the Cuban Church was crushed, no question. But it was crushed when the bourgeoisie was crushed. Because God really is interested in this Church."

The theme is one to which Cardenal returns throughout his book. A Catholic priest who resides in the Nicaraguan religious commune of Soreni, known throughout South America for his poetry and for his philosophy as a Marxist revolutionary, he is haunted by the knowledge that his own church was, and remains, an enemy of reforms.

Both the poetry and the Marxist philosophy are evident in this collection of notes, yet it is his regret and anger at the failure of the church to play a positive part in the making of the new Cuba as priests have done, though without success, in other Latin-American countries, that concerns him most.

After his 1970 visit to the island, to sit on the literary panel of the annual Cuban literary competition, Cardenal returned a year later to interview Castro and, again, that wish Church and State might have collaborated, might still join forces, was at the heart of his questioning of the Cuban leader. (The interview was conducted in a small, moving car that flitted about Havana with short stops to meet revolutionary groups, CASIL's usual nocturnal schedule and perhaps the reason the CIA and the Mafia have never got a clear shot at him.)

situation in the rest of Latin America has changed; there the Catholic Church is obviously moving toward Marxism."

Castro seems to have given Cardenal a somewhat evasive answer.

"Marxist philosophy and Christianity coincide in 99 per cent of the time," he conceded. "Look, I know Christianity as you know it. And I know that the authentic Christianity is revolutionary... But here not everyone knows Christianity that way, and there are certain prejudices against it which one must count on, and which are explained, besides, by the way that the Cuban Church behaved here. The Church here, you know, was very bad. It was not the Catholicism that you have had in the rest of Latin America, which has worked with the poor and the Indians. Catholicism here was not out in the country; it was town-centred; it was class-conscious. It was the religion of the rich."

The priest left Cuba without resolving the question uppermost in his mind, but in the process he has produced a fragmented, yet perceptive, document of the Cuban revolution that is particularly timely now as Cuba resumes trade with some of its South American neighbors, may come to terms with the Organization of American States, and may be nearing the end of the United States' blockade.

He is at pains to find the weak spot of the years under Castro and quotes many a dedicated revolutionary who worries about a growing bureaucracy, but there is little doubt that he is in sympathy with the overall aims of a Socialist state and describes in glowing terms those achievements in equality, housing, education, and a national purpose that are so in contrast with the rest of South America.

His description of modern-day Havana with its empty stores and its transformation from the "sin capital of the western world" is memorable. "Havana at night is a dark city because it has no billboards all lit up," he writes. "The newcomer" has the impression that there has been a

Derek Wyndham's book might be described as "much ado about snowscapes." The writing is part-prose, part-poetry, and the emphasis often seems to be symbolic. Generally Wyndham strikes me as a contrived and cerebral poet, but still very weak and artificial.

Hefner bows to 'Bunny Lib'

CHICAGO (UPI) — Playboy publisher Hugh Hefner, the object of a Playboy bunny picket earlier this week, said Friday he was relaxing the rules to make "bunny lib" a reality rather than just a slogan.

A group of Playboy bunnies picketed the Playboy building protesting some archaic work rules and wrote Hefner an open letter. They charged he set the cause of "bunny lib" back 10 years by not allowing bunnies to date keyholders.

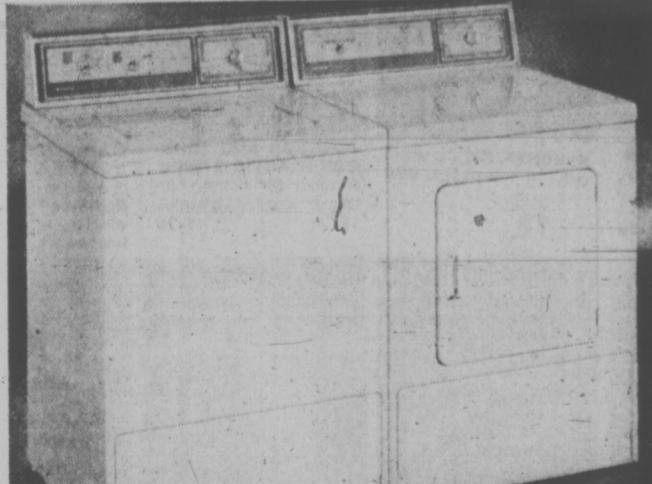

They also protested rules stating they could not give out their real names and were not allowed to come into the Playboy Club as private citizens.

MEXICO CITY American feminist Betty Friedan has called the election a man as president of the International Women's Year conference "an insult to the women of the world."

"I think it's very sad and pitiful that none of our (U.S.) government delegation raised hell about," she told a press conference Friday, 24 hours after Mexican Attorney General Pedro Ojeda Pauliada was elected president.

It was the first open criticism leveled at Ojeda Pauliada's selection by the 1,000 conference delegates — eight per cent of them women.

No Prosecution Of CIA Staff, Colby Thinks

WASHINGTON, (AP) — Director William Colby of the Central Intelligence Agency says he thinks no CIA employees will be prosecuted for the agency's illegal domestic activities.

He made his remark in his first interview since a commission under Vice-President Rockefeller described last week some "plainly unlawful" domestic CIA operations.

The justice department is studying evidence gathered by the commission to determine whether prosecutions should be undertaken.

The Rockefeller commission found a series of illegal CIA operations against U.S. citizens including surveillance, the opening of mail, monitoring of telephone calls and the testing of powerful drugs on persons without their prior knowledge.

Colby said CIA employees would not be prosecuted for crimes "if they were doing it in the belief that it was in the course of their duties, a reasonable exercise of their functions here, under a belief that it was even lawful because of the gray areas in the law that the commission referred to."

"I don't think that anybody here is going to be actually convicted or even put to a prosecution."

Colby said the misdeeds would not recur, and referred to the likelihood of increased supervision of the CIA by Congress and the executive branch, clear prohibitions in directives he has issued and the current attitude of CIA employees.

Colby predicted that if he told an employee to violate one of the directives, he would refuse "and he'd go public on you or he'd go to a congressman on you."

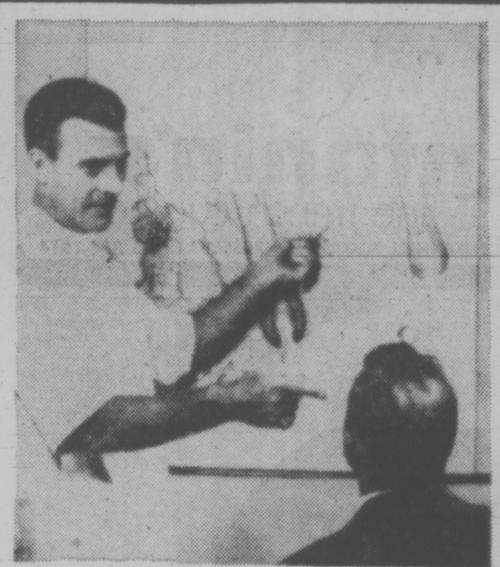

Colby, 55, also said he had rejected during his CIA career that began in 1951 assassination suggestions from foreigners and U.S. government employees. He refused to give any details of these discussions.

He also refused to discuss published allegations of CIA involvement in assassination plots or attempts against such foreign leaders as Cuban Premier Fidel Castro and the late Dominican Republic dictator Rafael Trujillo. Nor would he discuss any possible involvement of President John F. Kennedy or his brother Robert in alleged assassination schemes.

"I don't think that anybody here is going to be actually convicted or even put to a prosecution."

"Scalp tension, a sign of the times, is one cause for your hair loss," says Harrison trichologist to balding man. A specialist from the famous Harrison Hair and Scalp Clinic will be here to advise men and women how to correct hair troubles by home treatment.

How to save and improve your hair demonstrated by expert here Mon. & Tues.

New home treatment methods for preventing baldness — and improving the appearance of the hair — will be demonstrated in Victoria this Monday, and Tuesday, June 23 and 24.

This news was released here today by Harrison Hair and Scalp Specialists. In their announcement, they named staff trichologist G. White to conduct the Victoria clinic. Mr. White will personally examine hair-worried men and women from 1:00 to 8:00 p.m., Monday and Tuesday at the Sussex Apts.

Examine You Free

You incur no charge or obligation by seeing Mr. White. Your only obligation, is to yourself — to free your mind of worries about hair loss, dandruff, itching or other scalp disorders, by learning how to take care of your hair. If your trouble is beyond the scope of Harrison treatment, we will frankly tell you so. But less than five per cent of the people we examine are "hopeless."

Who Can Be Helped?

We cannot help men who are slick-bald after years of gradual hair loss. But where your scalp still grows hair, we can at least improve what you have. The important thing is: Don't wait until it's too late!

Our biggest problem is to overcome the average man's initial skepticism. He's usually quite desperate by the time he nerves himself to see a Harrison trichologist. He's "tried everything," so he starts consoling himself with one of the old superstitions about hair: That men naturally lose hair as they get along in years; that nothing can be done to prevent hair loss... and a lot of other notions that we know are not true today.

Free Scalp Examination

See Mr. White in person. Learn how baldness can be avoided and hair growth encouraged. The new Harrison method permits you to save and improve your hair in the privacy of your own home. For an examination and discussion of your hair problem, ask the desk clerk at the Sussex Apts. between 1:00 and 8:00 p.m. for the suite number of Mr. White.

Barefoot Breed Of Reporters Shine in China

By DAVID ROGERS

SHANGHAI (Reuters) — China's newspapers are developing a new breed of reporters known as barefoot journalists.

Working alongside factory hands and commune laborers, their job is to conduct social investigation, install village correspondents, and maintain the bridge between the tightly controlled press and its readers.

Shen Kuo-hsien, deputy director of the Shanghai daily Wen-hui Pao, says his newspaper is striving to eradicate "the personality approach" to news and to open its pages to the people.

There are no star reporters in the Chinese press and articles written by peasants and workers have as much chance of getting good play as those by professional writers.

To improve their "ideological state," Chinese journalists must go to cadre schools for up to six months to study revolutionary thought and do manual labor.

Shen said the 150 editorial staffers of Wen-hui Pao had completed at least one course at cadre school, learning that they were not above the masses.

But more and more Wen-hui Pao is relying on workers and peasants instead of journalists. It's now a network of 2,000 "worker-correspondents" in the greater Shanghai area, most of them trained by barefoot journalists sent out to factories and farms.

There are no advertisements in Chinese newspapers, few photographs, no cartoons, no comic strips or crossword puzzles.

A Chinese journalist probably has never heard of an expense account or competing against a rival newspaper. There aren't any.

Like other journalists in this teeming city, Shen is aware of Wen-hui Pao's reputation as the most radical of China's major newspapers.

In late 1965 it published possibly the most consequential article ever printed in China.

Written by a then-unknown journalist, Yao Wen-yuan, the article launched China's great proletarian Cultural Revolution — an event that changed the history of the world's most populous country.

The Communist party's central committee in Peking was under the control of revisionists and Chairman Mao Tse-tung came to Shanghai to deliver his counter-attack.

Yao Wen-yuan's article, personally approved by Chairman Mao, fired the salvo that started the revolution.

Today Yao is an influential member of the all-powerful politburo and Wen-hui Pao is known, in Shen's words, as "an advanced newspaper."

Its circulation has risen to 910,000 from 150,000 since the Cultural Revolution, he said.

Special Team Starts Cataloguing

Contents of 114-Year-Old Point Ellice House

How Much Did Gov't Get for $455,000?

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

A nine-member team is busy at historic Point Ellice House finding out just what the provincial government got for the $455,000 it paid for the house last December.

Historian Michael Zarb and eight students will spend the summer going through trunks and attics and desk drawers, cataloguing everything in the 114-year-old house.

They've already got a list of 4,000 items, everything from tables to gravy boats, and expect to have double that number by the summer's end.

The house, home to three generations of O'Reilly's, sits on a two-acre waterfront site on Pleasant Street, a little street that runs off Bay Street just east of the Bay Street bridge.

John O'Reilly, grandson of Peter O'Reilly who built the house, still lives in it with his wife Inez.

They restored the house and opened it as a private museum in 1967, but rising costs forced them to sell the property to the government last year.

Mrs. O'Reilly has been retained by the government as curator.

The 15-room one-story house is what one expert calls "a veritable storehouse of Victorian bric-a-brac".

In the kitchen there's an incredible array of dishes, including a 138-piece set of china.

Zarb and his student workers have extended their search outside the house to a hill by the water's edge which was a garbage dump for the early O'Reilly's.

There the team has been conducting a proper archeological dig, digging up part of the bank in 50 square centimetre sections and carefully recording everything they find.

They've come up with many shards of pottery which are carefully washed and pieced together to restore the original dishes.

One Chinese bowl found in the dig is unlike any dishes found in the house.

Zarb thinks the government got its money's worth in Ellice House, not so much in the individual items in the house but in the total package.

The furniture and other items in Ellice House have a personal quality that is missing in most museums, he said, because we know about the people who lived in the house.

These are not impersonal antiques, but evidence of the life of the O'Reilly family, from Peter who came from Ireland in 1859, his children Frank, Arthur and Kathleen, and now John O'Reilly, the present tenant.

For example we can see a basket of embroidery implements in the house. We know it was Kathleen's, and we can see the embroidery she made with the implements, said Zarb.

Terry Eastwood of the Provincial Archives has been going through the many papers of the house, sorting those which are of archival value and must be preserved from those which could be put on display in the house.

Among the papers is a Christmas card signed by Queen Victoria, and some letters written from Sir John A. Macdonald to Sir Joseph Trutch, B.C.'s Lieutenant-governor in 1871.

Trutch was brother-in-law to Peter O'Reilly, and the letters were found in Trutch's rosewood desk, which is in the morning room at Ellice House.

The cataloguing has Ellice House in something of a shambles, but the house is still open to visitors from 10 to 5 each day.

Admission has dropped from $1 to 25 cents since the government takeover.

Mayors Rap CPR As E&N Trimmed

Passenger and freight traffic on the E and N Railway between Parksville and Courtenay will halt in nine days because two old trestles on the 40-mile stretch can no longer be guaranteed safe.

A spokesman for CP Rail in Vancouver said today it would cost $1.7 million to replace the 19-year-old wooden bridges and revenue from the line doesn't justify that spending.

The surprise announcement has produced another storm of protest from spokesmen in up-island communities who have lambasted the company in recent years for its Dayliner passenger service between Victoria and Courtenay.

CP Rail, owner of the E and N, had earlier applied to the Canadian Transport Commission to discontinue the passenger service entirely, claiming it is a money loser. A date has not yet been set for a public hearing on that application.

The CTC would also have to approve before the Parksville-Courtenay stretch could be permanently abandoned.

The CP Rail spokesman said today that arrangements are being made with Vancouver Island Coach Lines to provide co-ordinated bus service over the Parksville-Courtenay link and details will be announced next week.

The rail lines' freight customers are left to make their own alternate trucking or other transport arrangements.

The trestles involved are over French Creek and the Tsable River. The Dayliner, on a recently altered schedule, runs daily except Sunday and two freight trains a week have been using the line. About 1,000 freight cars travelled the line last year.

Freight and passenger service between Victoria and Parksville is not affected by the July 1 closure.

Courtenay Mayor William Moore said a special council meeting will consider the development.

It was "most annoying" CP Rail did not advise Island mayors when it met with them two months ago to discuss the Dayliner schedule. He said he finds it hard to believe the company didn't know until recently the section of the line was going to be closed.

"I think it's disgraceful they did not advise us before now... the CPR better be prepared to reimburse the people of northern Vancouver Island for the many gratuities they have received."

It was a disgraceful action by a very unpopular corporate citizen," said Cumberland mayor William Moncrieff.

Cowichan MLA Karen Sanford said the latest development strengthens her position that the service should be a public railway.

Most of these demands have fallen on deaf ears for a long time and in April this year McGinnis warned that tourists and residents in the Long Beach areas face another summer of inconvenience and unsatisfactory conditions "unless something is done within a month."

Nothing was done, of course. And there will still be the "inconvenience and unsatisfactory conditions" — at least for this summer. But there is a ray of hope on the horizon. And right now Don's a little happier and he's not yelling quite as loud.

The way the mayor sees it, though, when your pay works out to about eight cents an hour, you have a right to let off a little steam.

That's where the mayor's screaming comes in. He has told both governments in no uncertain terms that they must pull their weight. Ottawa, he says, must do more to make sure the national park isn't a burden on the community and the provincial government must help upgrade water, garbage disposal and hospital facilities.

Involved is certainly the word for Mayor McGinnis. He is also on the Hospital Board, is Tofino's representative on the 11-member Alberni-

Keep the Bars Licensed Not Licentious—Mayor

Mayor Peter Pollen still wants to put a halter on the strippers in Victoria's drinking establishments, despite a "no action" recommendation from Aldermen Malcolm Anderson, Bob Ellis and Bill Tindall, Pollen said he hasn't seen the morality squad's two-page report but he can well imagine "that it was a pretty superficial thing."

The mayor, who was absent on holiday when the report was submitted to council, said he believes the matter does merit more detailed study.

"In the interests of the community and of the very young, I feel there should be some regulation as far as the proliferation of nude and generally licentious displays in bars in this community," he told reporters.

This type of activity hasn't been legislated for. Provincial legislation has not specially provided that it be allowed. This type of entertainment has really come in the back door."

Pollen stressed that he's not out to legislate morality in Victoria. There has always been some demand for stripping, burlesque and similar forms of entertainment, and there always will be.

But he is concerned that it does not spread to all licensed establishments in the city; that one pub or another is not compelled to employ strippers merely to compete with those already offering such acts.

Notwithstanding earlier concerns expressed by Pollen on the subject, the sub-committee also recommended that the city impose no restrictions on Sunday trading.

The mayor wasn't as critical on this point, but he did advocate adopting a more positive and defined position:

"If we're going to have an open Sunday (where stores can open if they so choose) let's say that; let's say we're not going to have a day of rest, a day of tranquility."

"At the present time it's a matter of some very aggressive merchants filling a legislative vacuum," he added. "I think it's most important that we do something definite, not just say let's do nothing at all."

More Hope, Less Yelling by Tofino's Mayor

low

When it comes to lambasting the federal and provincial governments, loquacious Mayor Don McGinnis has been making quite a name for himself over in the west coast village of Tofino.

Beautiful Long Beach, which stretches down the rugged coast to the south of Tofino, and the still-developing Pacific Rim National Park, bring more than 800,000 tourists flocking each summer and the tiny hamlet of less than 500 just can't handle the influx.

That's where the mayor's screaming comes in. He has told both governments in no uncertain terms that they must pull their weight. Ottawa, he says, must do more to make sure the national park isn't a burden on the community and the provincial government must help upgrade water, garbage disposal and hospital facilities.

Involved is certainly the word for Mayor McGinnis. He is also on the Hospital Board, is Tofino's representative on the 11-member Alberni-of the Tofino Council and four years later, when Hugo Peterman retired, was elected mayor by acclamation. And for that he picks up the princely sum of $700 a year. An alderman gets $600.

There are four meetings a month and, because it's a small place, the mayor finds his home, which overlooks beautiful Tofino Inlet, is no escape from his office. The phone rings continuously and people are always popping in with plans and requests. For the time he puts in as mayor, Don reckons it's worth about eight cents an hour.

"The trouble in a place like this is if you voice an opinion, everyone says why don't you do something about it," Don said.

"If you're in anything, you find you become involved in everything."

By HOWARD COLLINS

OTTAWA (CP) — Price increases this year for gasoline, home-heating fuel and natural gas probably will be indicated in the federal budget Monday.

Signs point to an increase of eight cents a gallon for gasoline and heating oil.

Prime Minister Trudeau says his government will know before Monday the new prices to be imposed on crude oil July 1 and on natural gas Nov. 1.

He said he is not sure when the price increases will be announced, pointing out that Alberta will not give final approval to any agreement until it sees the budget.

In its budgetary message, the government appears required to give some indication of how much tax it will collect from the oil and gas companies. It broke down income from the oil and gas companies.

Finance Minister John Turner said last month, that the budget might have to make some assumptions on price.

However, Prime Minister Trudeau said this week he has almost completed telephone negotiations with the premiers on prices and the government would know by Monday.

Both Ontario and Nova Scotia say they continue to oppose price increases until inflation and unemployment are beaten.

Although no estimates have been released officially, most government and industry sources say they expect an increase of $2 a barrel on oil and one of 20 cents to 30 cents a thousand cubic feet on natural gas.

That would increase the price of gasoline and home-heating fuel by eight cents a gallon and raise the annual natural gas bill of an average homeowner by between $30 and about $45. Such an increase would add $1.5 billion annually to consumer spending.

Ottawa says higher prices are needed to encourage a search for more oil and natural gas in the face of reports that Canada will be short of petroleum in the 1980s.

The industry says it needs both higher prices and some cuts in the tougher resource taxes imposed by Ottawa on them last year.

The industry says that even with a $2 increase for a barrel of oil, now $6.50, companies would lack enough money to step up exploration programs.

They say they hope for some changes in the budget.

"I can't believe Ottawa intends to maintain the existing taxes," said a spokesman for the Canadian Petroleum Association. "But there have been no signs of a reduction."

Imperial Oil Ltd. and Gulf Oil Canada Ltd. say the consumer will benefit little from higher crude prices. There would be little money for exploration.

Gulf President Jerry MacAfee estimates that if taxes are unchanged, the companies would get three cents from a $2 increase. The remainder would be split between the governments, Alberta taking an extra $1.47 and Ottawa 50 cents.

Besides exploration, Ottawa has other reasons for raising the domestic price of oil. A federal fund was set up to subsidize the cost of foreign oil imported for use in eastern Canada at the higher international rate, about $11 a barrel.

The subsidy ensures that consumers east of the Ottawa River Valley, dividing most of Ontario and Quebec, pay no more than the domestic price of $6.50 a barrel of crude oil. The subsidy is expected to cost the government anywhere from $300 million to $500 million this year.

The subsidy is a direct result of the fact that Western Canada oil fuels Western Canada and goes in dwindling amounts to the U.S. while eastern Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces use higher-cost foreign oil.

The subsidy has been financed by a tax on oil exported to the United States, but exports are expected to average 650,000 barrels a day this year, down from the peak of more than one million barrels daily.

The industry and the Alberta government say they hope Ottawa will change its stand on the resource tax issue but that they see little hope as they await the budget.

An issue is a decision by the federal government last year to levy a tax on royalties paid to the provinces by the resource companies, a move the provinces and industry oppose as double taxation and an intrusion into provincial jurisdiction over resources.

In its budget last November, Ottawa stood firm on the resource tax issue but it did relax exploration write-offs and tax abatements to total $100 million.

Faced with that decision, the Alberta government, producer of 85 per cent of the country's oil, eased its own tax and royalty provisions, giving the companies a further $130 million.

Finance Minister John Turner says the combination of the two tax cuts should put the industry in a healthy position.

The oil companies disagree, saying governments still are taking too great a slice of production income and leaving little to finance new exploration.

Kelly was remanded to June 27 for election and plea.

A busboy at Victoria's Wilson Inn is in fair condition in Victoria General Hospital after "being stabbed in the stomach during a ruckus at the Inn's lower level carpark 2 a.m. Thursday.

Frank Ross Ogilvie, 17, of 1009 Carberry Gardens, was first reported in critical condition.

Police said Kelly was arrested at the scene.

Police said Kelly was arrested at the scene.

Gary Sawin, 22, of 3255 Glasgow, was fined $500 and placed on two years probation on a 1974 charge of possession of heroin.

Sawin admitted possession of four caps of heroin, a spoon containing a small quantity of the narcotic, several syringes and a blowtorch, all found by police following a drug raid at his home April 2, 1974.

"It is apparent in the pre-sentence report this young man has had serious problems but has sought help in combatting his heroin addiction," defence lawyer Robert Price said.

"He has, in fact, served his own probation for the last 14 months and has done it successfully," Price continued.

Price said because drugs are readily available in prisons, the community would be safer to have him outside prison walls than within.

Federal drug prosecutor Michael O'Connor recommended a short jail term, followed by a lengthy period of probation.

"The co-accused in this incident was sentenced Dec. 13, 1974 to five months in prison and placed on six months probation... although the background of the accused and co-accused is not the same, the offence is nonetheless a serious one," O'Connor said.

Ostler decided to impose a fine a lengthy probation term rather than a jail sentence.

"The accused has had a very difficult battle with his addiction and has done his best to overcome it. It appears he has succeeded," Ostler said.

Murray Scott Moran, 22, of 2072 Chaucer, sentenced by Judge Harold Alder Thursday to 30 days in jail, followed by a one-year term of probation on a two-count charge of breaking and entering and theft Jan. 9, received what amounted to an additional year of probation when sentenced on three further charges of break-ins Jan. 8 and Jan. 10.

"I do not think it is in the best interest of the accused to receive different sentences because charges which occurred around about the same time period come up before different judges," Ostler said.

Moran received a two-year probation term and suspended sentence on the charges.

"Any person charged with a crime which occurred around about the same time period come up before different judges," Ostler said.

Warren John William Wright was found two days after his escape by RCMP in a home in the Campbell River area. He must serve the six months before completing a term received for a Victoria area offence.

Murray Scott Moran, 22, of 2072 Chaucer, was sentenced to 30 days in jail, to be served on weekends, followed by a one-year term of probation. Moran was found guilty following a trial on a two-count Saanich charge of break-ins Jan. 9 at two service stations, where a total of about $20 in coins was taken.

Canadian Law Reform Commission recommendations made to the federal cabinet Thursday are geared to a society which "pitiless, succors and even encourages" thieves and murderers, the president of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police said.

Chief Jack Gregory of Victoria said the commission has failed to consider that there is "too much crime and too many victims."

The commission's recommendations included abolishing life sentences and permitting maximum sentences of 20 years for any offence; separation of offenders who represent a serious threat to the life or security of others, and a maximum three-year sentence for people convicted of murder who are unlikely to hurt others.

Chief Gregory said the recommendations are another appeal to soften punishment for criminals and an attempt to trim costs of operating the Canadian penal system.

NHL Not Selling Its Product To Bargain-Basement Bidders

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Faint hopes that the National Hockey League would land a new national television contract for next season are even dimmer now after the NHL meetings this week in Montreal.

NBC, which refused to renew the NHL's regular-season contract, has received no reply to a proposal that would bring the league limited exposure during the 1976 Stanley Cup playoffs.

The result is that the NHL now is off national TV after more than five seasons with CBS and NBC.

The NBC post-season offer now is reported to be the NHL's board of governors indicated that it would turn it down if it came before them in Montreal.

NBC, which refused to renew the NHL's regular-season contract, has received no reply to a proposal that would bring the league limited exposure during the 1976 Stanley Cup playoffs.

It was not acted upon for two reasons, according to one TV executive who sat in on the meetings. Primarily, he said, "it was a matter of pride, they felt they were getting scraps... and also just a small package of post-season games would not be financially rewarding enough for the effort."

The regular and post-season agreement with NBC over the last three years paid each of the 18 NHL teams about $185,000 annually, and a contract limited to Stanley Cup games would reduce that to about $50,000 a team, if that.

The league's governors just weren't taking.

They felt that independent agreements and an independent network made up of interested league cities during the playoffs would also provide that kind of money.

Despite heavy promotion by NBC, and CBS when it had the contract, hockey never achieved the TV popularity on a national basis that football, baseball and basketball enjoy.

Many stations in the south, southwest and west refused to take the NBC hockey games, although they were affiliates of that network. The sport enjoyed TV success mainly in cities where there was an NHL franchise, and even that was only partially true.

TV executives still chuckle when NBC's misfortunes in Atlanta are mentioned. Although the city had an NHL franchise, the expansion Flames, the network's TV affiliate said no to the NBC-NHL package.

Hockey does enjoy TV popularity in some cities in the United States and throughout Canada. The best example is Boston, where WSBK-TV, televises a minimum of 75 games each season. During the two seasons the Bruins won the Stanley Cup, the figures were closer to 100 games.

TOM WATSON'S reaction as putt for birdie drops into hole on 18th green.

Watson, Lightning Strike

MEDINAH, Ill. (AP) — Lightning-shy Tom Watson carries a three-stroke lead into today's third round of the United States open golf tournament after putting together a record matching 36-hole total of 135.

Watson, 25, delayed the start of his second hole round, a three-under-par 68 Friday, to invoke the lightning rule to the dismay and embarrassment of U.S. Golf Association Officials.

"I saw a big storm was coming and I knew from a clap of thunder that lightning was only a mile away, so I walked off the starting tee and went into the clubhouse," explained Watson, who last year let the Open escape his grasp with a final round blowup.

Tournament officials didn't agree, but when they went to the first tee with Watson's playing partners, Lee Trevino and Bobby Nichols, as Watson smilingly recalled, "Zap, lightning hit nearby."

After a 25-minute halt of tournament play, and an apology to Watson by P.J. Boatwright, U.S. Golf Association executive director, Watson methodically took apart rain-plagued Medinah Country Club's par 71 course for the second successive day.

Watson's 36-32 effort followed an opening 67 and put him three strokes ahead of another former collegiate star, Ben Crenshaw, who also carded a 68 for a 36-hole total of 138.

Watson's 135 matched the halfway Open record set in 1960 by Mike Souchak and tied in 1958 by Bert Yancey.

Among the old guard pursuers, favored Jack Nicklaus, seeking a fourth Open title and a big second leg on a grand slam bid, lingered seven strokes behind at even-par 142 after rounds of 72-70.

A notch ahead in a three-way tie at 141 was another former Open champion, two-time winner Lee Trevino. He was a stroke behind Pat Fitzsimons, the first-round co-leader with Watson, whose 73 gave him a third-place total of 140.

Terry Dill, helped by a second-round 69, and Jim Wechsler were bracketed with Trevino at 141.

Arnold Palmer wobbled to a 75 with a ragged putting game. That went with an opening 69 for 144, nine strokes off the pace.

Also poised at 142 with Nicklaus were England's Peter Oosterhuis and Grier Jones, who faded from 69s to 73s.

Bob Panasiuk of Windsor, Ont., the only Canadian in the tournament, had a 71 in the second round for a 147 total to qualify for the final two rounds.

Watson last year ballooned to a closing 79 after leading by one stroke at 54 holes to finish in a tie for fifth behind Hale Irwin.

Irwin shot a par 71 Friday to trail far behind at 145.

"My main feeling is patience now, not to get too conservative," said Watson. "I'm more composed than I was at Winged Foot last year."

Sixty-seven players made the cut at 149, with such notables falling by the wayside as veteran Sammy Snead, falling for the 34th time in an Open title bid; former Open champion Tony Jacklin, 1970 and Orville Moody, 1969; former

Masters champion Charles

Cooday, and former PGA titlist

Bobby Nichols.

Also failing to qualify were

Tom Nettles, a former Canadian Football League player whose 82 gave him a 162 total, and former Ontario Open winner Artie McNickle of Dry

Creek, Calif., whose 84 gave him a 158 total.

Pele's Fans Exuberant

Times News Services

Wolfgang Sunholz' goal at 2:06 of the second overtime period gave Boston Minutemen a 2-1 victory Friday night over New York Cosmos in a North American Soccer League game marked by Pele being swamped by fans on the field at Boston.

Sunholz drilled a 25-yard kick past goalie Sam Nusum to end the marathon match.

Pele, the world's foremost soccer player who only recently joined the Cosmos, was mobbed by fans after he had an apparent tying goal disallowed with 11:33 left in regulation time. He appeared to be injured and a stretcher was moved onto the field.

When the crowd was dispersed by police, Pele went to the dressing room surrounded by officers. However, a team spokesman said later that Pele was uninjured and was taken out as a security measure because of the fans who lined the field six-deep.

Long after the game, the team reversed itself and said Pele injured his right knee and right ankle. However, the injuries did not appear serious, the spokesman said.

Pele had only one shot on goal in the first half — an indirect free kick that was saved by goalie Shep Messing — and appeared tired in the second half before departing.

The 34-year-old Brazilian came out of an eight-month retirement to sign a reported $4.5 million contract with the Cosmos.

All 13,500 seats were sold for the appearance of Pele and the Cosmos. Several thousand more fans were admitted with standing room tickets and stood only a few feet off the artificial turf and behind both goals.

Elsewhere, Steve David

set record five goals to lead Miami Toros to an 8-0 thrashing of the Washington Diplomats; Stefan Szter banged in three as Chicago

Atoms 6-2, and midfielder Fis

vided Los Angeles Aztecs with RESIDENTS CAN GO ON FREE TOUR WHEN GRAND PRIX HITS TOWN

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A proposal for a Grand Prix automobile race in downtown Long Beach has been approved by the California state coastal commission.

The Grand Prix proposal was approved with a provision that race promoters give an estimated 1,400 residents, who would be subject to the growth of racing automobiles, an appropriate choice of free out-of-town tours.

Christopher Pook, a spokesman for Long Beach Grand Prix Association, said the residents could choose between free race-day visits to Palm Springs, San Diego, Santa Catalina Island and Santa Barbara, with lunch thrown in.

Race promoters plan a Formula 5000 race in September as shakedown for the Grand Prix race next April. The Grand Prix will make Long Beach the only city in the world outside of the city-state of Monaco to have automobile racing on downtown streets.

Ahern Displays Slump-Over Sign

PLYMOUTH, Ind. (AP) — Kathy Ahern shrugged off a two-year slump Friday and took the first-round lead in the $40,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association Hoosier tournament with a five-under-par 67 at Plymouth Country Club.

Miss Ahern, 26, played the back nine first in four-under

Expos Didn't See Humor In Misplays

By The Associated Press

Perhaps the only thing missing was the Keystone Kops.

"I felt like the cop in the middle of the street in a Mack Sennett movie," said Philadelphia third base coach Billy De Mars after watching eighth-inning shenanigans Friday night that helped the Phillies score four runs and beat Montreal Expos 7-4 in a National League baseball game.

In other National League games, Pittsburgh Pirates downed New York Mets 5-1, Cincinnati Reds whipped Houston Astros 7-3, San Diego Padres edged Los Angeles Dodgers 2-1, Atlanta Braves beat San Francisco Giants 4-2 and St. Louis Cardinals defeated Chicago Cubs 8-3.

With the Phillies trailing 4-3, Jay Johnstone and Mike Schmidt singled and Tony Taylor bunted the runners up a base. Dale Murray replaced starter Steve Renko and Mike Rogodzinski singled to tie the score and send Schmidt to third.

That's when the mental gears and life comedy-shifted into high gear.

Phillies' manager Danny Ozark sent up Tommy Hutton to bat for pitcher Tom Underwood. Montreal manager Gene Mauch sent Fred Scherman in to replace Murray. Then Ozark countered by sending Ollie Brown up to bat for Hutton.

Brown sent a grounder to shortstop Tim Foli and Schmidt took off for home. The throw to the plate was in time to nail him so he slammed on the brakes and retreated to third.

Schmidt, Rogodzinski and the ball all got there about the same time but the ball, thrown by catcher Barry Foote, hit Schmidt on the shoulder and bounced into left field.

Schmidt braked once more and raced home with the tie-breaking run and got hit in the shoulder again, this time by a throw from left-fielder Tony Scott.

"I don't really know what happened," Schmidt said. "When I went into third, I threw my arms up trying to get hit again."

In all the confusion, Rogodzinski wound up on third and Brown made it to second. Scherman, clearly unnerved by the goings-on, walked Dave Cash to load the bases, hit Greg Luzinski to force in one run and walked Dick Allen on four pitches to force in another.

Luzinski had driven in the Phils' first three runs with his 15th home run of the season in the first inning.

Red Voters May Regret It—Vatican

VATICAN CITY (Reuters) — The Vatican said Thursday that Italians who cast a protest vote for the Communists in the recent regional elections may regret their decision.

In its first official comment on the election results, which showed sweeping left-wing gains, the Vatican said many electors appeared to believe that the Italian Communists were different from Communists in other countries.

"But modern history teaches us that, as far as Communists are concerned, all roads have the same goal: a dictatorship, said to be of the proletariat, but in fact over the proletariat and everybody else," the official Vatican weekly L'Osservatore della Domenica said in an editorial.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

You Are Not to Worry—Jesus

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

We are all, in varying degrees, victims of worry. Some of our worrying, of course, has valid causes, but much of it is needless, a waste of emotional energy. Many of our worries are about things we cannot appreciably change.

Worry will not stop time passing for you at the rate of 24 hours a day. Worry will not bring back yesterday so that you can do things differently — the way you know now you should have done them.

Worry is not telling today's vital and vibrant young person becoming in 20 or so years a not-so-vital and not-so-vibrant middle-aged person. Two plus two will continue to be four, no matter how much you worry about it.

Like you and me, Jesus' disciples were worriers. They fretted and fussed over many things, a few of which may have been of some significance.

Their worrying led them to quarreling and dissension. One day Jesus tackled them on this: you can read what he said to them in the 12th chapter of Luke's Gospel, verses 22 to 31. His key statement to them is, "You are not to worry": that is the way it is given in the New-English Bible.

The Greek word rendered there as "worry" originally meant in "suspense" or "in mid-air," and I am tempted to put the statement as You mustn't become hung-up."

A clear distinction cannot be drawn between "anxiety" and "worry," but it does seem convenient to use "worry" for something more tentative than anxiety and not as disabling.

Religion Now Subject For Science Fiction

By DAVID ANDERSON

Science fiction, not long ago relegated to the realm of cheap pulp paperbacks, has begun to emerge as a serious means of theological speculation.

In recent years the sudden rise in the popularity of science fiction — in the works of such writers as James Blish, Isaac Asimov, Clifford Simak, Poul Anderson and Robert Heinlein — has been instrumental in the way large numbers of the younger generation think about politics, social organization and interpersonal relations.

Religion, too, is a subject for science fiction.

And, increasingly, many readers of such science fiction and fantasy works as that of C. S. Lewis, J. R. R. Tolkien and Charles Williams are beginning to recognize that these profound Christian thinkers were using their fiction writing as a means of talking about such theological doctrines as God, the nature of man and the reality of sin in the world.

The reality of such fictional devices as Lewis' space trilogy or Tolkien's "Lord of the Rings" has led more traditional Christian thinkers to deal with the question of how God will be imagined in the future.

Hiley Ward, for example, in a new book, "Religion 2101 A.D." (Doubleday) takes on the relationship of religion

Ward suggests that science fiction "plays almost a theological role as it describes, and even attempts definitions of God."

"Science fiction reflects the cultural input of the present, but it also raises questions about the nature of the God of the future," he said.

Ward suggests that God is being recognized by some theologians. The recent Hartford Declaration, for example, signed by 18 prominent religious thinkers, was intended as a reaffirmation of transcendence against what the signers believe to be errors of time.

The idea of the transcendence of God is being recovered by some theologians.

"Science fiction reflects the cultural input of the present, but it also raises questions about the nature of the God of the future," he said.

The various images of God presented in science fiction, however, are not usually very palatable to most notions of God as a loving being.

To say that God is a taxi driver, Ward said, does two things: It suggests the otherness of God as well as the fruitlessness of the attempts to define God.

"Any attempt to identify God almighty, the king of the universe always fails," he said.

Nevertheless, the attempt will go on "since man lives by symbols and tries to 'show' his idea of God in art and theology.

BOSTON — The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts — often called the Mother Church — has just opened a new front door.

In fact, it's the first time the historic edifice has had a main entrance, and the familiar Back Bay landmark is suddenly drawing fresh attention.

The new entrance has columns and carvings and examples of old-world stonework craftsmanship rarely called for by builders these days. In fact, the search for artisans trained to do the delicate work was one of the challenges of the project.

The new portico front marks the completion of a process that began at the turn of the century.

The original church, a modest stone Romanesque building, was completed in 1894. But it wasn't big enough for growing congregations and a huge, domed extension was completed in 1906.

Today the original is still tucked beside the Byzantine shoulders of the extension, and is still cherished by church members because of the pioneering effort it represents.

The new entryway has broad steps which open onto terraced and brick-paved walkways, and landscaped spaces that flow to other parts of the church centre.

The Christian Science Publishing Society is on one side, The Mother Church Sunday School on the other.

Ten, 32-foot limestone columns form the portico's classic half-rounds.

Just beyond the columns are revolving doors set in a glass wall reinforced by bronze bands. These doors lead to a ground floor lobby where two elevators take churchgoers and visitors to the auditorium and its balconies.

Passersby will have a clear line of sight to the auditorium where tiers of organ pipes fill an archway behind the main platform from which two readers conduct church services.

A sunburst rose window, set in a circular parapet beneath a gabled roof, has 12 petals and is 10 feet in diameter. Its stained glass will be illuminated from the inside.

No ceremonies marked the May opening of the portico and the formal completion of the centre.

Instead, in a brief statement, the Christian Science board of directors called for "works instead of words" and renewed dedication on the part of Christian Scientists in a time when spiritual values are being tested more sharply than ever before by the materialism of modern life."

"Mary Baker Eddy, who founded the Church of Christ, Scientist, believed it possible to reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing even in the midst of a scientific age," Board member DeWitt John commented.

"This is proving practical," he said, "but it is a cause requiring strong moral and spiritual devotion on the part of those who would seriously enlist in it."

ROLLING STONE

'Music Loses A Good Friend'

By BEN FONG-TORRES

BERKELEY, Calif. — For the Jefferson Airplane, Ralph J. Gleason wrote the liner notes to their first album and declared: "Listening to rock bands has convinced me — and I'm old enough to have teen-aged children of my own — that we are in the process of evolving a new kind of electronic music. The sound of Jefferson Airplane is a jet-age sound, but its music speaks for all time, once you open your ears to it."

* * *

For the readers of Rolling Stone magazine, which Gleason helped found in 1967, he wrote a column called "Perspectives," channelling would-be rock artists about the complex and growing business they were entering. And, setting the music in a context of jazz, blues, country and pop, he restated his belief in the magic of rock and roll: "These groups," he wrote, referring to the post-Beatles crop of West Coast bands, such as the Airplane, the Doors, and Country Joe and the Fish, "are now creating the music out of their own experience, out of their own heads, and in the process are also creating a life style which is going to change America."

With Ralph Gleason's death, at age 58, of a heart attack June 3, music has lost a close friend.

Gleason was born in New York, attended Columbia University, and worked for CBS and ABC before moving to San Francisco. As Time magazine once reported, he began listening to jazz when as a junior in high school he was bed-ridden with a case of the measles. He recovered to the accompaniment of Louis Armstrong and Earl "Fatha" Hines. By 1950, he was writing for Downbeat magazine and began covering music for the San Francisco Chronicle, interviewing Elvis Presley, Little Richard, and Fats Domino along with most of the major jazz artists of the time. In the '60s he began a four-day-a-week column.

* * *

He was the first jazz critic who recognized the social importance of rock music and began writing about it for a national audience," said Paul Scanlon, a senior editor at Rolling Stone. Gleason was an early supporter of Lenny Bruce, Miles Davis and Bob Dylan. And, as Phil Elwood, jazz-pop critic for the rival San Francisco Examiner, said, "More than anyone else, he was responsible for the national acceptance of San Francisco as a centre of the rock scene. He considered that the product of the rock generation was fully as important as jazz and blues as an expression of American, rather than European-based music."

Gleason's Chronicle articles were syndicated throughout the United States and Europe. He also served as an editor for Downbeat and Stereo Review, and regularly wrote liner notes for the San Francisco-based jazz label, Fantasy. His notes for Miles Davis' "Bitch's Brew" album and Duke Ellington's "Golden Years" were nominated for Grammy awards. He twice won The Deems Taylor Award from ASCAP — for his 1967 article, "Jazz, Black Art, Black Music," and for a 1973 tribute to Louis Armstrong. Gleason contributed to the Encyclopaedia Britannica Yearbook and the World Book Encyclopedia, and his works have been collected in several volumes: "Jam Session," published in 1957 (Putnam's); "The San Francisco Scene," 1968 (Ballantine), and "Celebrating the Duke and Other Heroes," scheduled to be published this fall by the Atlantic Monthly Press.

* * *

In other media, Gleason was a disc jockey on a San Francisco FM station, KHIP, which became KMP1, the first "underground" rock station in the U.S., for which he also did commentaries. For educational television, he produced a series of 26 programs on jazz and blues, as well as the first documentary on pop music, "Anatomy of a Hit," in 1964. His 1968 documentary on Duke Ellington won a nomination for an Emmy.

Gleason gave up his daily column in the Chronicle in 1970 (but continued as a Sunday columnist) to become vice-president of Fantasy Records. Among many projects, he was executive producer for "Payday," the acclaimed country and western feature film that starred Rip Torn.

In 1967, he and Jane Werner founded Rolling Stone, and Gleason served as an editor, consultant and, with the "Perspectives" column, as a critic of both popular music and society.

His last column for Rolling Stone was about I. F. Stone and entitled, "A True Media Hero." He described Stone as "the journalist as incorrigible man, as honest personified, and, as such, he brings to life an American myth: that the honest journalist is in the muckraking tradition of Lincoln Steffens, is a saint who can save us all by his integrity and his dedication to truth."

The same could well be said about Ralph J. Gleason, a dedicated listener — and teller — of the truth.

SUMMER MUSIC program at Victoria Conservatory of Music will be under the direction of two artists from London, England. Pianist Lynn Hendry, a graduate pupil of Robin Wood and now a busy soloist and chamber musician in London, will work with Jack Rothstein, concert master and co-conductor of the St. Martins-in-the-Field Chamber Orchestra. They will be joined by conservatory faculty members in a session lasting from July 2-30. On their return to England Rothstein and Miss Hendry are scheduled to record the Beethoven violin sonatas. Master classes and private tuition will head the summer program at the conservatory.

BOULET ... wants to expand into films one of the major contemporary art forms and certainly has its place in a modern gallery."

There are wonderful films being made in Europe and by our own National Film Board which we would most logically present if we had the facilities.

He was not able to say if the new $500,000 expansion to the gallery, now in fairly advanced planning stage, would be likely to provide the area for this development.

"We would require a room suitable for lectures and concerts with a projection booth. No one can properly enjoy a film when the noise from the projector is conflicting with the sound-track," he remarks.

Music is one of Boulet's big enthusiasms. Music definitely has a proper place in an art gallery, he feels, particularly chamber music which is thoroughly at home in the intimate reflective gallery environment.

He speaks with delight of the only chamber concert he has heard in the gallery since his arrival, given by the Amabile Quartet lead by Harry Colwood. He has yet to be exposed to performances by other noted local chamber groups.

Mozart, Bach, Beethoven, Monteverdi are special favorites along with Ravel, Debussy, Webern and Stockhausen. These are a few whose music he discusses with relish and whose recordings he cherishes.

For himself — "if I can find time" — he has a strong desire to take lessons on the clarinet.

No Toll Option At Road Blockade

PEMBERTON (CP) — Indians blockading the Mount Currie-Lillooet Road decided Friday to let nobody through it, not even for a toll charge.

When the blockade began earlier this week to protest the seizure by federal fisheries officers of food fishing nets, the Mount Currie Indian Band opened it to travellers for a fee of $50 a vehicle or $5 for anyone on foot.

At least two district business paid the $50 fee to get equipment past the blockade at the head of Lillooet Lake, about 80 miles north of Vancouver.

But Chief Allan Stager said Friday the toll fee option was discontinued at a band council meeting Thursday.

The council also agreed that the blockade will stay up at least until the end of a five-day "Indian independence" celebration which gets underway on the reserve Saturday.

Stager said between 4,000 and 10,000 Indians from all over British Columbia will gather for the celebration, to mark the rejection by Indians or government funds in their determination to press their claims to land never surrendered by treaty and lands cut from B.C. reserves without approval of the bands.

The council also agreed to let Jim Decker, manager of CRB Logging Co. Ltd. in Pemberton, bring out heavy equipment stranded between the blockade and the entrance to the reserve at Mount Currie.

Persons wanting to travel the road to the east side of Lillooet Lake and to Lillooet will be met at the reserve entrance and advised to turn back because of the blockade about six miles down the road.

New UBC Gallery Displays Indian Art

A large and important collection of Northwest Indian art has been given a new permanent home in Vancouver. The University of British Columbia Museum of Anthropology now houses the university's collection of 10,000 Northwest Coast Indian artifacts, including country's most superb collection from the Kwakiutl group.

A further 10,000 artifacts from other parts of the world make up the international part of the collection, said to be second in importance in Canada only to the one at the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto. The recently presented Koerner collection adds another 340 Indian pieces to the museum.

Until now, artifacts have been crammed into the narrow confines of a basement architect Arthur Erickson has designed the museum. Pains-taking attention to space, height and window light enables visitors full perspective of the artifacts and the chance to relate them to the outdoors. The many-windowed structure is on terraced land near Marine Drive facing the Strait of Georgia. Central to the structure is the Great Hall, which is the massive carving gallery; its windows tower 40 feet, enabling giant totem poles to be seen natural light against the dramatic natural background. There are smaller galleries each with different anthropological themes.

'IRISH HILLBILLY' HERE

A series of night club engagements across Canada will begin Monday in Victoria for Lonnie Donegan — "King of Skiffle" or "Irish Hillbilly."

The 20-year veteran entertainer whose bravura performances still pack 'em in wherever he appears, will be at the Stardust Cabaret, 1037 View, Monday through Thursday.

Donegan will be featured once nightly at 9:15 p.m. Best remembered for such hits as Does Your Chewing Gum Lose Its Flavour on the Bedpost Overnight, Rock Is-land Line and My Old Man's a Dustman, he is equally well-known as a talented songwriter and TV star.

His record sales throughout the world exceed 19 million. The Guinness Book of Records shows Lonnie as the second artist ever to have a single (My Old Man's a Dustman) enter the top 20 at the number one position. This was Elvis Presley.

He has appeared twice before Queen Elizabeth in royal variety performances, has set all-time attendance records in major theatres in Britain, Australia and New Zealand.

Last year in Vancouver's Blarney Stone, Donegan drew sell-out crowds that forced an extended engagement.

Tickets for his four-night run at the Stardust are now on sale at McPherson Playhouse box office or reservations can be made by calling the club.

Make the Most of Water

Watering restrictions in certain areas have home gardeners somewhat frustrated, and those who have never tried gardening under such conditions feel that all their efforts so far this season have been in vain.

Take heart! Many of us have lived through successive years of restrictions and always had a good garden. True, we had a lot to learn, but learn we did, and some of those lessons have been valuable in the years since.

When it comes down to fine points, gardens in general were much better during the restriction years because the little water available had to be used in the most effective way. We discovered our plants were much healthier when they were thoroughly watered once in a while than they were when we teased them with a light sprinkling every day.

We learned the value of water, as everyone does when on a limited supply. We realized that gallons which had previously gone down the drain could be collected in a pail, and we discovered that one day's collection was more than enough to take care of the needs of seedlings.

We found that laundry water containing a mild pure soap had a lot of value in the garden. Poured around the roots of cabbages it made things unpleasant for root maggots; sprayed over the headed cabbages with a syringe it made the meals of the grey cabbage aphids tasteless and they decided to move. It also made life unbearable for any kind of aphids on plants.

But remember, we used only mild pure soaps in those days, not triple action, stain-removing soap powders. These concoctions would probably remove the cabbage as fast as they remove the stains.

We also found that the less frequent watering gave us much harder growth on our trees and shrubs. Very little winter damage was suffered after a summer under restrictions because the soft sappy growth we normally encouraged was not present.

And because the growth was harder we had less trouble with pests. When you give it some thought, we humans don't find tough stale bread very appetizing, and would only want to eat it as a last resort.

One of the first lessons we learned was that something had to be added to our soils to keep the limited supply of water within the reach of plant roots, and we found the answer in compost.

When we added compost to the soil the results were phenomenal compared to our earlier efforts. The compost filled in a sandy soil so that water did not run through and rush out to sea, and it opened up clay soils and let in air and warmth which are both of great benefit to plants.

The extra time we had to spare on non-watering days was spent cutting down weed on vacant lots for making more compost, and we used bath and laundry water to help speed decomposition. So successful was this that we reasoned that lye in the soap had a beneficial effect on compost, and years later we came across directions for making compost with lye published by a manufacturer of the product.

Lawns made only half the growth and therefore needed less cutting, much to the benefit of the grass plants, and we used the time normally spent on lawns for hoeing the soil of beds, borders, and vegetable plot, to provide a dust mulch which prevented excessive evaporation of soil moisture.

In those days we were not only restricted to watering on alternate days, we were also limited to certain hours during which water could be used on the garden and some years water was only allowed on food crops. That was the time we planted vegetables in the flower and shrub borders, to get little water to the shrubs and perennials.

It only took one year to realize the folly of that starting regular watering in mid-April before the soil dried out. By maintaining a reasonable amount of water in the soil as spring rains became less frequent we were able to get along nicely when restrictions became effective in June.

It was impossible to water the whole garden in the two hours allowed, and it was impossible to operate a sprinkler during that period when all the neighbors were also watering and pressure was from a trickle to a drip.

So we put out sprinklers away and laid open-ended hoses at the roots of one plant after another and allowed the water to soak deep into the soil.

While this meant frequent trips down the garden to move the hose, each plant received sufficient water at its roots to last a couple of weeks until it received its next drink. And did those plants thrive! Never before had they received such a good soaking.

As you can guess, it wasn't long before each gardener worked out a watering schedule, starting in one corner and progressing each watering day in a predetermined manner until the last corner was reached, then back to the beginning again.

We had to change our ideas about watering and discovered, to our amazement, the thousands of gallons we had previously wasted and paid for, and that constant watering is not the answer to a successful garden.

Many of us, to this day, are still putting into practice the lessons we learned from the days of watering restrictions, and I would say from experience, that those were some of the most valuable lessons we ever learned. Some us feel that the restrictions were a boon to both gardeners and plants.

The first thing to realize is that limited water usage is not a catastrophe; it is, at first, an inconvenience, but it is also a benefit in many ways.

For those whom restrictions were previously unknown, the main problem will be the lack of water applied before the restrictions were imposed, because your plants have no reserve moisture in the soil on which to draw until they get their next drink.

Evaluate your plants carefully. Decide which have shallow root systems and are likely to suffer most. Give these priority. Soak them well and forget them for a while.

If you are growing food crops for more nutritious meals, or just to eat the budget for food, concentrate on these and let the petunias wait. The petunias feed the soul, not the body.

You will also understand the fallacy in sowing a huge vegetable garden all at once. The gardener who sows little and often will be able to maintain the crops that are maturing, and bring along the later sowings with dish water and the water saved from household chores.

Lastly, remember that there is the will there is a way to overcome any obstacle, and that hundreds of gardeners dependant on unpredictable wells have found a way to success with the minimum of water.

Under drought conditions, the heat is mightier than the hose.

HOSPITALS 'SNAKEPITS'

TORONTO (CP) — There is no place for a human being to die in peace in the civilized cities, The Globe and Mail quotes a 43-year-old woman dying of cancer as saying in a copyright story.

Phyllis Dorfman says in an interview with medical reporter Joan Hollobon places for cancer patients like herself are "snakepits".

"We think we're civilized . . . society treats cancer patients like lepers," she is quoted as saying. "The only places we have open to us for our final hospital are snakepits . . ."

The newspaper says the choices facing persons like Mrs. Dorfman, whose cancer was discovered less than a year ago, are hospitals for the chronically-ill, rarely with private rooms and full of older patients, many of whom are senile and agitated.

'By Women, for Women, About Women'

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

A row of potted plants and a beautiful stained-glass sign in the shape of the women's movement symbol fill the window of a little store in Oak Bay.

On the sign is the name of the shop, Everywoman's Books. Just four months old, Everywoman's Books is a non-profit, co-operatively run bookstore for women.

"Women are really hungry to read about themselves," said Ann Hillyer, one of the nine women in the bookstore co-operative.

Branching Out 'Wild Idea' Hit with Canadian Women

EDMONTON (CP) — About 18 months ago Susan McMaster of Edmonton hung up a few posters in the city inviting women to "listen to a wild idea of mine."

The idea was to start a top-quality national magazine for Canadian women.

At the first meeting, the women discovered "that we shared a desire to publish such a magazine, that we thought we could do it, and that we were going to make it a damned good try at doing it," she said.

Today the magazine, Branching Out, is in its ninth edition and has attracted readers from the Maritimes to the Yukon who are delighted "not to find a recipe on every page."

Copies are generally sold out from coast to coast and, despite token payment, the magazine has managed to solicit contributions from writers as well-known as Margaret Atwood.

"It seems that women across Canada were looking for what we were offering," said a statement by the editorial staff in its December, 1974, anniversary issue.

Intended as a forum "by and for women," each issue contains about 50 pages of related fields. The group has prose, poetry, photography, book and film reviews, news about women's groups across the country and articles covering everything from the nursing profession to the problems of being a welfare mother.

Branching Out is produced on high-quality, glossy paper, a feature viewed as important by Naomi Loeb, a CBC production assistant who was in the founding group.

"We wanted to attract a wider audience than would be drawn to photo-copied feminist publications, important as they are."

Moreover, the staff decided from the beginning to accept only high-quality contributions.

"We want to provide an opportunity for fledgling women writers, but we've had to turn down a lot of mediocre manuscripts from women whose efforts we admired but who didn't meet our standards," Loeb said.

The magazine, published every two months, is staffed by 10 volunteers, most of whom have full-time jobs in related fields. The group has no office or telephone, and expense accounts are unheard of.

The group has managed to publish regularly since December, 1974, and now is distributing the magazine in Saint John, N.B., Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. Circulation of the $1 publication is about 5,000 — at a cost of $2,000 an issue — and there are about 1,200 paid subscriptions.

Although publications with a feminist slant traditionally attract younger readers, a recent survey showed Branching Out is read by a wide age and occupational range, with 18 per cent of the readers over 50.

The group began by incorporating as the New Women's Magazine Society and sinking about $2,500 of their own funds into the first issue. They then solicited material from writers, who were paid $3 for their first contribution and $7.50 for their second, plus two subscriptions. Rates haven't changed since.

"It hurts us not to be able to pay contributors more, but even the token amount shows that we value what they are doing," Loeb said.

The society was able to find some advertisers and, through personal contacts and women's groups, set up distribution points across the country.

The final headache was production. Unable to afford typesetting and with little experience themselves, the group rented facilities and found themselves in the midst of a three-week job of 14-hour days.

Branching Out finally appeared on the stands and met an encouraging response from readers and the media. But a big let-down followed the first issue.

"We had produced a magazine and we were very proud of ourselves, but suddenly there loomed the idea that we had committed ourselves to something," said Mary Alyce Heaton, business co-ordinator.

"For about six weeks we just sat there. Then it became apparent that we had to have someone in charge of putting the thing together or it would never be done."

The society named Sharon Batt, a psychology graduate from Ottawa, as top co-ordinator, adopted new administrative techniques and redefined roles. With some publicity from CBC radio's This Country in the Morning and a $2,500 government grant, it has continued to roll off the press regularly since.

"With each issue we became more and more committed and the magazine became more professional," Loeb said.

Today the magazine still is staffed by volunteers, contributions are solicited and, with the exception of hiring a printer, the staff handles all aspects of publication, from layout to distribution.

"We still have debts and no money," Heaton said.

Plans for expansion are under way, although Loeb said the society is now reaching a "philosophical crossroads" about what direction Branching Out should take.

One change under discussion is removing a ban on male contributors. There has been criticism from some that the magazine is too conservative, and from others that is too radical.

"We still have debts and no money," Heaton said.

"It's been so hard to get feminist literature and any kind of works by women, for women and about women," she said.

Hillyer and her young colleagues decided to meet that need.

They pooled their resources, scraped together $1,500, and set up shop at 2033 Oak Bay Avenue on Feb. 14.

"We carry things that we feel are beneficial to women's growth," Hillyer said of the store's growing stock of paperback books and magazines.

On the shelves are Jane Austin and the Brontes, Kate Millett and Simone de Beauvoir, Gertrude Stein, Doris Lessing, Sylvia Plath, Rosa Luxemburg, Margaret Atwood and Margaret Lawrence.

"We don't carry Harlequin romances — or Lionel Tiger," said co-op member Rosalie Walls with a laugh.

Tiger, in his book Men in Groups, claimed male dominance of politics and business is based on a biological factor called male bonding.

Hillyer and Walls don't deny that women can learn something even from such he-men writers as Ernest Hemingway and Norman Mailer.

"But that kind of book is being flogged all over the place," Hillyer said. "What we're trying to do is present some images of women that we feel are real."

The co-op stocks only books that one co-op member has read or books whose content is known to a co-op member.

The store doesn't carry Cosmopolitan or the Ladies' Home Journal, but it does stock Ms., Chatelaine and a number of less commercial women's magazines, including a lesbian publication.

The store stocks non-sexist children's books, such as I Can Be Anything You Can Be, a picture book which on its cover shows a little white boy standing in the rain and a little black girl smiling, standing under her umbrella.

Also on sale are posters supporting the federal NDP candidate of Rosemary Brown.

"It's a cosy shop, with rugs on the floor, a couple of comfortable armchairs, and a coffee pot that's usually hot.

On the walls are paintings and wall hangings done by local women artists, as well as a bulletin board for notices.

Some hanging plants add to the decor, and when Hillyer and Walls are minding the store there are usually a couple of shaggy dogs asleep on the floor.

The co-op members each work two afternoons a week to keep the store open from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesday to Saturday.

No salaries are paid, and the co-op members still subsidize the store from their own pockets so money from sales can be used to buy more books.

Some women's groups and individuals also donate to keep the store going.

Because they're not out to make money, and because they're independent of no government grants, the women are sure their store will succeed.

"We won't go under because we want the store to stay open," said Hillyer.

Welch Medical Report

By DR. FRANK MILLER

When those breathless television youngsters storm on screen to announce a drop in their "cavity-count," the commercial that follows might better serve the public's health if they said that where the fluoride belongs is in the drinking water, not just in the toothpaste.

With the public health in mind, they might quote the words of Dr. Luther Terry, former United States Surgeon General, who put it simply: "... fluoridated water prevents up to two-thirds of the tooth decay that children would ordinarily suffer. Furthermore, it is medically safe for people of all ages and its benefits last for a lifetime."

Research conducted over the past 35 years has established beyond question the benefits of lacquering our drinking water with traces of fluoride to reduce tooth decay. And these same studies have established unequivocally the safety of fluoridation for those who drink the treated water.

In the light of these facts, it is difficult to understand why it is that more water supplies are not fluoridated.

Part of the explanation is that, somewhere along the line, fluoridation has been turned into a political issue, and has had to be approved by referendum and by elected officials. Can you imagine having to get permission from the mayor of your community, or appealing to the electorate, to have a flu shot or a smallpox vaccination?

The situation is hardly different, although the fluoridation question is complicated by a small but vocal minority who object mightily to adding fluorides, as if they were not aware of the number of other chemicals that of necessity go into the preparation of urban drinking water.

They seem ready to overlook the addition of such chemicals as chlorine, nitrate and phosphate, which are routinely added to drinking water to make it fit to drink, pleasant to look at and palatable.

The conflict results not only in unnecessary toothaches, which is bad enough, but in unnecessarily soaring costs for dentistry that could perfectly well be avoided.

It was estimated in 1964 that the cost of dentistry required by the citizens whose water was not fluoridated was in excess of $700 million a year — a figure that probably rose in 1974 with inflation to nearly a billion and a half.

At a moment when money is tight, inflation rampant and the need for preventive medicine universally acknowledged, it is unacceptable that this proven public-health measure is so widely hindered by cranks and honored only by slippery, tooth-paste commercials.

DEAR DR. MILLER: My question concerns how you go about picking the best puppy from a litter. Everybody seems to have different ideas on this. Could you suggest anything?

A recently developed puppy-picking procedure is based on behavioral patterns displayed by the individual puppy. It relates to social attraction, independence, dominance, and other factors which, when charted, give an excellent portrait of the individual puppy's tendencies related to personality development.

This, combined with a later physical examination by a veterinarian, should provide a practically perfect puppy and presumably, with the right kind of help along the way, the (practically) perfectly compatible adult canine.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Our son claims his pet pigeon has roundworms. Is this a possibility or is he seeing things?

— W.N.

DEAR W.N.: It's possible he's seeing roundworms, since pigeons may have them. It's possible effectively to roundworm pigeons, though this would do little good unless good housecleaning were employed afterward to prevent new outbreaks of the same parasite.

A CHILD LEARNS TO SWIM

This is the seventh of ten lessons for a child learning to swim. You've been using Freddie Frog's lessons from his mother to show how easy it is.

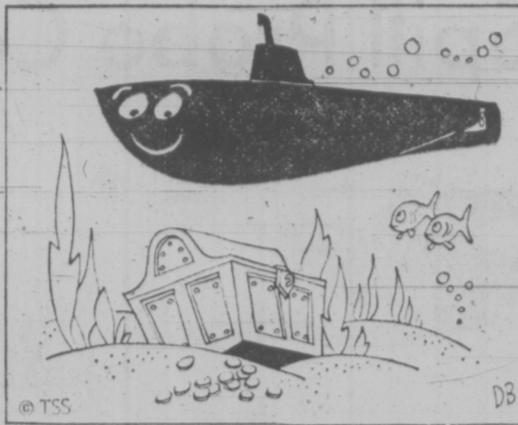

In the last lesson he learned to propel his body through shallow water by lying face down with his hands on the bottom and pushing back with his hands.

Now, tell him Freddie Frog has had the great idea he wants to be a submarine looking for sunken treasure on the bottom of the sea. Freddie thinks of his legs as motors on the submarine and knows that by moving them, he moves through the water. Suggest he too can move through the water by moving his legs.

Demonstrate by lying on the water with your hands on the bottom and moving your legs up and down about six inches in kicking motions. Now, suggest the child do the same with only the tips of his fingers holding up his body.

He'll be delighted to find his own leg motions will move him forward.

Lifetime with Plants

Edmund Herman Lohbrunner, who now holds a title and degree of Doctor of Laws, honoris causa, from University of Victoria, sat back in a comfortable chair under a garden umbrella at his home on Lohbrunner Road, and gave me a long, introspective look.

Then he said quietly, "it's an honor I share with all those who have worked, as I have over the years, not only to find and collect alpine plants, but also to conserve the wild flora for future generations to enjoy."

Ethel Lohbrunner, in a chair nearby, nodded agreement. At the same time, there was a look of pride in her eyes that let me know she also believed that in conferring of the degree, husband Ed had received much personal recognition.

She is right, of course. That became evident as we talked. For despite his unassuming attitude, Dr. Lohbrunner has done much in his lifetime to assure that the award does carry a personal tribute.

In the early '30s he accompanied well-known alpine plant authority Marcel le Pinec, on a collection trip to the Smith River area of the Oregon Coast Range.

Together they discovered a heather-type plant with shiny leaves and pink bell-like flowers that has since become known under the name of kalimopsis lepiniae.

"A rewarding experience," is the way Ed describes that expedition now.

Wife Ethel adds that "two years ago the le Pinec name came into our lives again when Ed became the first Canadian to win the American Rock and Garden Society's prestigious Marcel le Pinec award."

That award is given to the person on the North American continent who in the society's view has contributed most to the cultivation and appreciation of rock and alpine plant growth.

It was in the '30s, too, that Lohbrunner was commissioned to go into northern British Columbia on a plant collecting expedition, sponsored by the president of the Royal Horticultural Society.

"My brother Joe went with me," Ed told me with the faraway look of remembering in his eyes.

We drifted for 500 miles down the Yukon River on a raft. We clawed our way up precipices, took off overland to nearby mountain ranges and explored the rocks and marshes along the shore, looking for the rare and unusual in flora."

Lohbrunners cherish alpine plant greenhouse sight of alpine flowers and I came back with a number of specimens, including the yellow erythronium (wild Easter lily to the uninitiated) and I've never looked back since."

Soon he was concentrating on rock and alpine shrubs and plants and when the move was made in 1945 to the 23 acres where they now live, to rhododendrons, ferns and trees.

The Lohbrunners "continue to make yearly trips into the mountains. Soon now they will be off to the Coast range in Washington State and Ed says he is still looking at "a second go" at the Alps.

Because of poor health and failing eyesight, however, it is Ethel who now spots the tiny alpine plants for him — some bigger than a finger nail.

"We're a team," Ethel insists, "I spot the plants but it is Ed who says how many we take. That means one or two small pieces from this patch of plants and then one or two more from that spot, yards away from the first, in order, as he will tell you as a conservationist, to leave some for those who come after."

As conservationists as well as collectors, both Ed and Ethel Lohbrunner are "terribly concerned" right now at the "wanton destruction going on" in many places where alpine plants once grew in abundance.

Today, in their thinking, it is not the logging operations nor the urbanizing of certain areas that prove the greatest menace.

Rather it is the reckless disregard for alpine plants on motorcycles and 10-speed bikes.

"They tear off and sway from the trails and leave great ruts in flower covered terrain. Then when winter run-offs come, those ruts widen and deepen and the plants are swept away, never to be seen again."

Here Dr. Lohbrunner ends with a stern warning — "If something is not done to control such thoughtlessness — and that soon — there won't be any alpine plants left to collect — especially out Goldstream way and in our Sooke Hills."

Abortions for Teen-Agers

EDMONTON (CP) — The Alberta Medical Association reports that 38 per cent of the 4,465 therapeutic abortions performed in the province last year were on teen-agers.

Association officials, at a news conference, said a study showed that 1,700 Alberta teen-agers had therapeutic abortions in 1974. And, in a study conducted in Edmonton, one in every 10 women presenting themselves for a therapeutic abortion had had a previous abortion.

Ecological Disaster in Arctic Seen As Crash Spill Probe Continues

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

With full-scale drilling operations.

In actual fact, drilling has already begun, with the DINA and the DOE in conflict with each other over the legality of the operations.

Douglas Pimlott, a professor at the University of Toronto, an outstanding conservationist and a member of the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee, is one of those who question the legality.

He explains how, as early as September of 1973 Imperial Oil began to drill from Immerk, an artificial island built in the shallow waters off Richards Island. Since then Imperial Oil has built and drilled from two more islands, Adgo and Pullen. Sun Oil has also built two artificial islands.

Reluctant to be quoted, they never-the-less blame federal government policy and the impatience of major oil companies to get returns from their investment in the Arctic for the threat of awesome side-effects.

From July until September, about 100 scientists and technicians will be working on the Beaufort Sea project, which is funded by the oil industry and the federal government.

The project, which will cost more than $12 million, consists of 32 studies supervised by the department of environment, the oil companies chipping in $4.1 million dollars to support 21 of these.

All these studies, however, appear to be just a chip off a gigantic iceberg when it comes to assessing what oil exploration can do to the Arctic.

"Our major anxiety is that 18 months (the time allowed for the project, findings of which must be reported to the Arctic Water, Oil and Gas Advisory Committee by Dec. 31) isn't long enough to open the handle on the complex Arctic ecosystem," project manager Brian Smiley said.

The AWOGAC consists mostly of department of Indian and Northern Affairs officials, with some representation from the environment department.

Pimlott asserts:

"From the beginning, the government has tried hard to prevent information from reaching the public. All the important documents related to the plans for drilling are rated Restricted or Confidential.

"Possibly the most blatant effort at subterfuge was the decision to disguise the construction of artificial islands as normal land-use operations rather than to identify them as the first stage of offshore operations."

Pimlott, Smiley and many other scientists consider Arctic offshore waters the most hazardous areas in the world for drilling operations and the Arctic ecology delicate, easily damaged by the harsh impact of even natural phenomena.

"As an example, in 1960, 100,000 Eider ducks were found dead along the Yukon coast," Smiley said. "Their deaths were probably due to a combination of bad weather and polar ice conditions."

Pimlott warns that polar bears, marine mammals, waterfowl, sea birds, loons and shore birds will be the most affected by oil spills.

During the autumn, Pimlott said, parts of the Beaufort Sea where the most extensive exploration for gas and oil is being carried out from artificial islands become staging areas for about 75,000 snow geese, 25,000 brants and 10,000 white-fronted geese.

Pimlott also fears oil exploration will deal a deadly blow to the Inuit (Eskimo) of the Arctic, who still rely heavily on seals, polar bears and other wildlife for their existence.

"The risks are great," he warned. "In many Arctic regions, an accidental blowout could continue to spew oil or gas for almost a year since it could take that long to drill a relief well."

The "crash" Beaufort Sea project is the only one of its kind being carried out in the Arctic. Pimlott claims it was ordered too late and doesn't have enough time to fully assess the ever-changing Arctic conditions.

"Although DINA has been issuing permits for petroleum exploration in the Beaufort Sea for more than a decade it made no attempt to foster or encourage a program of research to assess the potential impact of exploration and development prior to submitting a memorandum to Cabinet to obtain approval-in-principle for offshore drilling," Pimlott points out.

He, Smiley and other scientists hope the heavy costs of exploration will give them enough breathing space to carry out the extensive research that is still needed.

"If exploration begins in 1976 it will begin slowly with two drill ships," Smiley said, "The costs may give us the extra time we need."

But how will the costs of that research be borne?

Will they be a direct burden on the Canadian taxpayer or a hidden cost, concealed in increased oil and gas prices?

EQUAL STATUS AHEAD FOR FEMALE CADETS?

OTTAWA (CP) — Seen but not heard, female army cadets may soon be given official recognition by the department of national defence.

There is legislation before the House of Commons which will replace the word "boys" with "persons" in the bill authorizing the cadet program; this will give girls equal status in the corps.

He says some girls are already commanding their own corps despite their unofficial status.

A special federal order-in-council allows funds to be spent on the girls this year and they will be involved in many cadet activities, including summer camps, junior leaders' courses and a King-to-Ottawa canoe trip.

STRESS ADVENTURE

This reflects the trend towards "adventure" rather than military training in the cadets. The military training was instituted during the second World War.

The Cadet League petitioned the defence department three years ago to let girls join the cadets. Col. Brown says it became clear the girls were just as capable and as interested in cadet activities as were boys.

"In some subjects they outshine the boys," he says. "We're not worried about their ruggedness at all. They've proven themselves in the past."

When the girls are officially recognized they will be allowed to take Arctic training, parachuting, leadership and challenge courses, cultural tours in England and adventure exercises in West Germany.

Col. Brown says there will be no "token" females on these courses and the girls will have to qualify for the programs just as the boys do. "They'll have to meet present standards, and we have no doubt they will."

Candid Camera Will Protect the Police

By REX THOMAS

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — A veteran Alabama law-enforcement officer has developed a new type of camera designed to stop the killing of police officers on the streets and highways.

It makes a continuous permanent photographic record of every car the officer stops and everyone he questions, said Col. Floyd H. Mann, former state director of public safety, and cannot be removed only by "authorized personnel" after the car has been returned to the shop.

It can be mounted beneath the dashboard and equipped with a periscope-type lens which extends up to the windshield level. Or, Mann said, it would greatly reduce highway murders," said Mann, "because I don't think very many people would like to commit a murder knowing their picture had just been taken along with the description of their automobile and tag number."

The camera will be hidden in the squad car and permanently attached, the veteran officer said, so it can be removed only by "authorized personnel" after the car has been returned to the shop.

Cameras have been used before, but the veteran officer said they have been too easily removed or destroyed.

Katmai National Monument, located on the Alaska peninsula, is an area remote from civilization. Its coast contains 100 miles of ocean, bays, fjords and lagoons, backed by glacier-covered peaks, crater lakes and smoldering volcanoes. The monument consists of more than 4,360 square miles and is the second largest area in the U.S. national park system.

The monument was established in 1918 to include the site of the great 1912 volcanic eruptions of Mt. Katmai and Novarupta Volcano, and the now relatively dormant Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes.

Since that time, the monument has been enlarged to include all the Naknek Lake and the surrounding area which affords protection for some of the magnificent wildlife of the Alaska peninsula, particularly the big Alaskan brown bear.

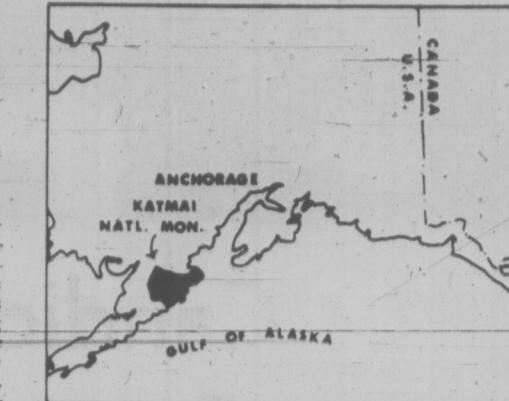

Today, the only easy way to reach the monument is by air. One commercial airline serves the King Salmon air terminal located outside the monument. From King Salmon, bush planes on floats make regular flights to Brooks River camp, where camping and lodgings facilities are available. There also are flights to the coastal areas, although these must be arranged on a charter basis.

Once at Brooks River Camp, the visitor can participate in varied activities. He may entice a 30-inch rainbow trout with a fly or cautiously catch a brown bear feeding on salmon.

Trail and lake shore are available for hikes in the wilderness, and a person may join nature hikes guided by a park naturalist.

He also will have the opportunity to inspect recent archaeological excavations of a prehistoric Eskimo igloo (pit house) near Brooks River Camp. Daily transportation is provided by a concessionaire bus along the scenic 25-mile trail to the Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes. A park naturalist accompanies you on the trip, which includes stops to view the magnificent scenery and wildlife. Once you reach the valley overlook, you have time to walk in the valley and wonder at what it must have been like at the time of the eruptions.

For those who wish to travel still farther into the wilderness, many lakes and rivers will provide a memorable canoeing experience, whether paddling down a quiet lake or challenging the rapids. Also, the wilderness hiker has an unbounded opportunity to travel through an untrammelled country where trails are frequently made and travelled by brown bears.

A trip to Katmai National Monument is an unforgettable experience.

Finn fashion popular

By STAN DELAPLANE

HELSINKI, Finland — "This is Marimekko country — the little dress for Mary" invented by Armi Ratia, Finland's finest fashion designer. Finns simply can't understand why Americans go mad about a plain cotton dress. It sells in the U.S. for $75."

(Our Girl O'Hara wears ONLY Marimekkos and right now she's in heaven. Or Helsinki which is the same thing.)

"At the fancy shop on the Esplanade, they go for $40. But we found the Factory Seconds shop at 1-Tunturikatu where you buy them for $20."

"For a Marimekko fan it isn't just a dress. It's a way of life. They come in simple country designs and wild color combinations. Durable and tough. Roomy and comfortable."

"A Marimekko goes under or over. Functions as a dress, coat, robe, shirt. Even as an apron. Each one is different — eleven pockets on some. Like a live-in file cabinet."

"Hand-screened, 100 per cent cotton. Mildly faded. The Finns are experts on fading and they should be. They've got 73 days of 24-hour summer sunshine. Gives them three times more experience than the rest of us."

"The Marimekko T-shirt and shorts are almost a Finn skin. Whole families come in polka dots and thick or thin stripes. In the U.S. shorts are 5.5 shirts for $11. Here they're a third of that."

"Greek widows wear them. Reigning royalty buys them. If you never get to Finland, try Harrod's in London. I saw the Marimekko line there for a third of the U.S. price."

"Conservationists would put a picket line on Helsinki if they saw the fur shops. Men's fur trimmed hats. Suede crowned jobs with red or silver fox earlaps."

"Sable lap throws. Cossack-style wool trimmed coats. Mink pillows and vests. Gloves in red fox, wilecat or Siberian lynx."

"Marvelous wood in Finland. The first thing that strikes you is the airport floors — EVERY airport made of the finest inlaid parquetry. Suggested to the Finns man they could make more money than flying by cutting floors into table tops for the U.S. trade."

"But he only said: 'Ha, ha' in a doleful voice. So maybe it's an old joke here."

"Odd shop is the feather factory Suomen Hoyer at Musekatö 22. (Around the corner from the Marimekko Factory Seconds.) Tiny but stuffed with goodies."

"Buy feathers by the bag and fill your own pillows. Down-filled, he a d o t o e parkas, $150. Sleeping bags, $70 to $150. Feather filled quilt, $80."

"Biggest department store is Stockmann's. They'll mail, insure and get your export tax refund. Small shops are not equipped for this service. Discount is 11 per cent if you're shipping things home."

"Lots to buy: Fish scrapers and rug beaters. Carelian rolling pins. Finlandia vodka in the iceberg bottle — $3 at the airport."

"Arabia glassware. Wooden sauna buckets. Birch scented oil. Mud pants for kids called Kaurahousut — clumsy but keeps water out. GREAT sailing gear. Sou'westers. Yachting emblems. Ski underwear. Famous Puukko knives."

"You can't miss with a rug. When a Finn buys a rug, he gets one that looks good on the floor, in his sleigh, on his wall or on his bed. How many rugs fill that bill?"

"The ryliy (rug) is the early Finn way of knotting into the wool to form the deep pile surface. Colors and designs are very Finnish."

"Jewelry designs are unique. Moon jewelry. Futuristic designs. Strange."

"I bought what I thought was a clever bottle opener. The saleslady pinned it to my lapel. Ask questions if you can't tell your brooch from a bottle opener."

Hell fire punch 'on the rocks?'

One of the most notorious clubs of the 18th century has been revived — in name only — in the caves beneath West Wycombe Church in Buckinghamshire, 30 miles northwest of London.

Sir Francis Dashwood — who visited Canada last spring to talk about his stately home, West Wycombe Park — direct descendant of the original statesman and founder of the Hell Fire Club, has reopened the caves for organized parties — not quite like those originally held there.

The caves were dug in a chalk hill to provide materials for the building of a new and better road between High Wycombe and West Wycombe, in the 1750's.

The club held meetings in the caves, and its members consisted of — Sir Francis's friends, including Benjamin Franklin, and young ladies of "ill repute." Nowadays Hell Fire Punch is all that is served!

A Pan-Celtic concert is to be staged this year for the first time in the long history of Wales' most important cultural event, the Royal National Eisteddfod. This annual festival of Welsh song, recitation, and poetry takes place this year at Cricieth in northwest Wales, August 4-9. The Pan-Celtic concert on the opening night will include performers from Brittany, Scotland, Ireland and the Isle of Man.

All the other Eisteddfod events are held in the Welsh language, and the highlight is the "Crowning of the Bard," an honour bestowed on the winner of the poetry award.

Cricieth, on the Lleyn Peninsula 60 miles west of Chester, is a small seaside resort which makes a good centre for touring the mountainous Snowdonia National Park nearby.

SAN FRANCISCO (CNS) — Sunday night is my favorite night in San Francisco. The weekend tourists are gone — all except me — and the boisterousness of Saturday night gives way to a calm reflectiveness. Tomorrow's convention delegates haven't arrived. It doesn't matter that I'll be leaving a 5:30 wake-up call to fly south for Monday morning at the office. Sunday night is a bonus added to the weekend.

At the Top of the Mark, sodden with nostalgia of wartime visits, I find the staff outnumber the guests. That's too calm and reflective. Empty bars give me the jitters, even on Nob Hill.

So outside for a walk in the snapping wind of a 'spring' evening, down California Street, past the glitter of Grant Street's Chinatown and down into the dozing canyon of Montgomery Street, where the stockbrokers will begin showing up for work in another eight hours or so.

At Ernie's, even on Sunday night, there's no danger of an empty bar. Owner Victor Gotti's standing behind a massive urn of white lilac, and the martini, straight up, is precisely what it should be. So is the rack of lamb.

Ernie's has just popped up in the new Mobil Guide as the only five-star restaurant west of Cincinnati, which of course is enough to send partisans of Imperial Palace and La Bourgogne and Blue Fox and Trader Vic's into gales of laughter.

Imperial Palace was my other big splurge this weekend, and perhaps it is the finest Chinese kitchen to be found from California to Hong Kong. If you go, have your minced squab before you order the rest of dinner. You may decide on a second order of that and be through. It comes with a plum sauce, served in firm leaves of lettuce like a taco.

But it's not necessary to seek out the grand restaurants in San Francisco, any visitor knows, because so many of them are still so inexplicably good, and the true San Francisco restaurant is off-street hideaway not yet discovered by the rest of the tourists.

ADOLPH'S, for instance, where the capellini is as light as spun cotton candy, and the sliced tomatoes taste like tomatoes, heaped with bay shrimp and made tart with the house's version of vinegar and oil.

Or the Tadich Grill, so uncompromisingly old San Francisco, making no concession to anything that's been added to the restaurant school curriculum in the last 50 years but simply putting out the most lovingly chosen and prepared seafood in the city.

These days there are more than 2,600 restaurants in San Francisco, their gastronomical standards supported by the locals who eat out with undiminished zeal, and by tourists and convention delegates who bring money to sustain the locals' taste and sharpen their own.

Food is no longer the attraction that it was for travellers in much of the world. Service in some once-unparalleled shrines is slipping.

Prices are up, quality is down, and there are times when serious restaurateurs despair that oncoming generations really care.

But more than half of the out-of-towners polled in a recent Convention and Visitors Bureau put this city's restaurants at the top of their list of cent survey by the San Francisco

Food is a century-old tradition in San Francisco, nurtured by the urbane tastes of bonanza kings and railway barons and the robust appetites of prospectors, lumbermen and seafarers of every nationality.

San Francisco has always been a place to eat, and these days the city is relatively a better place to eat than most of the world's great cities.

Perhaps that is why San Francisco restaurants overshadow the cable cars, Alcatraz, Chinatown and the Golden Gate Bridge on visitors' lists.

And walking back up Nob Hill on a Sunday evening to our hotel seemed enough of a torture to relieve the guilt of a weekend of unrestrained overeating. Dieting is for Mondays.

The same warming breeze which rustles the trees and accompanies singing birds spreads the pleasing fragrances rising from the well-kept beds of herbal plants.

"I missed tending my garden after I lost my sight," says Phyllis Tweed whose husband is also blind. "But here, we can touch the plants, smell them and feel the warm soil in our fingers. It brings back those pleasant feelings again."

Mrs. Tweed and her husband are among the blind at Beacon House, Bermuda's daytime home for the blind, who make regular trips to the garden. The highlight of the Beacon House summer season is the annual picnic there.

Through the undaunted efforts of Lady Gladys Hall, founder of the Bermuda Society for the Blind, this garden for those not blessed with sight was designed and constructed 15 years ago.

In the middle of the garden towers a large camphor tree encircled by wooden benches. The paths are made of Bermuda stone chippings with a square stone at each junction to indicate the change of direction.

GIANT ORE CARRIERS are common sight on lonely Yukon Territory roads. Amid spectacular scenery, this huge truck is transporting ore along Alaska Highway to Whitehorse, where it is transshipped to markets in Canada and U.S.

The centres comprise of exhibitions of the replicas, which are increasingly being installed in churches, to replace the originals for brass rubbing purposes.

LEGAL AID REFUSAL CHALLENGED

By IAIN HUNTER
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA -- A Conservative MP called on the government Friday to explain why it has rejected a plea for financial aid from the parents of Mary Steinhauser to represent her interests at the public inquiry into last week's B.C. Penitentiary hostage incident.

Bill Clarke (PC-Vancouver-Quada) however, so annoyed Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau that he refused to answer the question.

Clarke recalled that Justice Minister Otto Lang on Tuesday agreed to consider the request for financial aid after he, Clarke, explained that the parents of Miss Steinhauser, shot to death when guards rushed the area where three convicts held 15 penitentiary employees hostage for nearly three days, could not afford the expense of a lawyer at the hearings.

The MP told Trudeau that the family's lawyer, Robert Eades, has received a telegram from Ottawa rejecting the request.

He asked the prime minister why the government won't provide any funds so that Miss Steinhauser's parents, both old age pensioners, can protect their daughter's name at the inquiry headed by B.C. Chief Justice John Farris.

"I ask this particularly since similar lack of action by the government may have contributed to the killing of Miss Steinhauser by the guards or the RCMP," he said. Trudeau ignored the question.

Asked outside the House for the reason the request was rejected, the prime minister said he didn't know but added that it must have been "a very good reason."

Trudeau said he hadn't answered Clarke because he objected to "the form in which the question was put."

In an interview later Simma Holt (Lib.-Vancouver-Kingsway) said that Ottawa rejected the request on the grounds that it is up to Attorney-General Alex Macdonald to appoint a legal aid lawyer to represent the family if counsel for the penitentiary is not considered sufficient.

In any case, she said, she is sure Chief Justice Farris "would have enough concern for the dead girl and her parents to make sure there isn't any attempt to smear Miss Steinhauser."

A coded message was misconstrued by hostages at the British Columbia Penitentiary last week and they attacked their three captors, according to the Vancouver Province.

The death of Steinhauser followed.

The newspaper says evidence showing the coded message was misunderstood will be given when the Farris inquiry into the 41-hour ordeal resumes Monday.

It says it believes "some meaning other than calling the operation off" possibly merely to delay it--was taken from the cancellation message.

One of the hostages rushed one of the convicts at 1 a.m. June 11. Miss Steinhauser, who had been the most closely-guarded hostage, was fatally shot when prison guards rushed the vault where the hostages were held.

Wally Lightbody, lawyer for 14 surviving hostages and several other prison employees directly involved in the events, would not comment Friday on the issue of whether messages were misinterpreted.

He said "comments about things being very free and easy in there (the hostage vault) will be corrected" by evidence from his clients.

These people were traumatized and in a constant state of terror, and the only people who can give that evidence are those who were in there," Lightbody said. "So far evidence about what happened in there is hearsay."

In an interview later Simma Holt (Lib.-Vancouver-Kingsway) said that Ottawa rejected the request on the grounds that it is up to Attorney-General Alex Macdonald to

Water Users Must Pay--Pollen

Extension of water supply to Saanich Peninsula communities must be paid for them, and not become a "burden" on their urban neighbors already served by the Greater Victoria Water District, Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen said Friday.

Pollen, back from a European holiday to a revival of the long-running controversy over the peninsula's water problems, said it would be "grossly unfair and inequitable" to expect the core municipalities which established the efficient water system to finance a massive rural expansion program.

The mayor, who is also chairman of the Greater Victoria Water Board, said the municipally-run utility is "probably one of the finest Crown corporations in British Columbia, beautifully managed and with excellent forward planning."

But while it has the resources and the technical capability to extend piped water to the Saanich Peninsula, the residents of those benefitting areas must recognize the reality that they should foot the bill.

Pollen recalled that for the past two or three years, as planning committee chairman for the Capital Regional Board, he has suggested a tax on new subdivisions or perhaps some form of rezoning levy -- particularly in Central Saanich and Sidney -- to build up a reserve fund for water supply expansion.

Immediate priorities for the peninsula communities, he said, should be:

"The creation, within or outside the regional board," of a Saanich peninsula water board to bring together North Saanich, Sidney and Central Saanich into a rationalized water distribution authority;

"And they must address themselves to the generation of adequate finances to build a water line out to this area."

He rejected as unnecessary suggestions that the distribution of water become a regional function, as a means of spreading the burden of construction costs over the entire area.

WASHINGTON — Two Canadian companies are reported to be among an international group of uranium dealers being investigated by the U.S. justice department.

The Canadian firms are said to be Rio Algom and Denison Mines.

A Justice department spokesman confirmed the investigation is being conducted by the anti-trust division, but refused to confirm the identity of the companies involved.

However, an informed source said the information was "very credible."

The companies are all foreign and the key question being studied is whether the U.S. can enforce its own anti-trust and tariff laws against them.

The companies are based in Canada, Britain, France, Australia and South Africa. But it is contended that these firms could influence domestic uranium prices as well as the world market. Although the U.S. has embargoed uranium imports, some foreign material is made available through swapping arrangements.

Ironically, disclosure of the investigation came at the time that the White House disclosed a proposal by President Gerald Ford to allow the production and sale of enriched uranium by private industry in the U.S.

At present, enriched uranium production is a government monopoly.

The firms under investigation deal in uranium oxide, the raw material which has to be processed for use in nuclear power plants.

SHELVES LIGHT UP

Looking for more shelf space? Here's your answer with a built-in look and built-in lights! The concealed wall lights save table space, serve beds and desk. Glass or plastic shelf on top lets light flow up the wall as well as down.

Wall-mount the fluorescent fixtures. Center each where you want maximum light. To reduce eyestrain over study desk, face board should start 14 inches above the desk top.

For best light, use warm white tubes of maximum wattage: 40-watt ballasts fit 48 inch space; 30-watt need 36 inches. Separate switches on each light provide flexible control.

To order the "Things" Shelf That Lights Up, Too pattern No. 22-X send $2.00 cheque or money order to: DECO-PLANS, P. O. Box 90, Boucherville, Quebec.

A total of 313 civilian employees of HMC Dockyard in Esquimalt were off the job today as the rotating strikes continue.

A base spokesman said no pickets have been set up and all operations, except the ship refit work, are normal. The refit operations have been halted since the series of strikes by members of the Dockyard Trades and Labor Council began June 5.

In Ottawa, federal mediator Mark Thompson is arranging meetings between the trades and labor council and the federal treasury board. The two parties have been negotiating since March.

Thousands Flee Angola As Civil War Threatens

LUANDA (CP) — Thousands, blacks as well as whites, are fleeing from Angola as the threat of civil war looms over this Portuguese territory on Africa's west coast.

Potentially one of the richest countries in Africa, Angola has been plunged into turmoil by three rival African groups. Although an end may be in sight with the formation of a united army, the groups have been fighting each other for military supremacy before independence comes to the country of 6.2 million people Nov. 11.

Perhaps 5,000 persons — a conservative estimate, say local officials — have been killed in clashes since mid-1974. Most of the victims have been Africans.

Most of the deaths have occurred in gun battles in the streets of Luanda, the capital. The clashes usually erupt in the crowded black townships that ring the central business area of this tense port city. There is little black-white tension in Luanda.

The worst violence occurred between April 28 and May 1. An estimated 1,500 persons were killed in a showdown between two of the three rival groups.

There was more fighting in early June, but a general calm has been restored in Luanda. However, reports persist of sporadic fighting in the hinterland.

People are being flown to Portugal at government expense because they have no money to pay the fare. At least 500 people a day are leaving on commercial and military flights, and airline officials say all seats are booked through November.

Leaders of the three guerrilla factions met this week in Nairobi, Kenya, to try to resolve their differences. They issued a joint communiqué Thursday night saying they have agreed to form a single army.

"It's the little guy — the taxi driver, small shop owner — that's leaving," say one diplomat. "They feel the blacks want their jobs. Those with large investments in the country will stay and try and make a deal with the new African government."

Many of the departing Portuguese were born in Angola, and some of these say they may eventually move to Brazil. A diplomat explained that many Angolan whites are unsympathetic to the leftist government in Portugal.

The three rival guerrilla movements are:

The Front for the National Liberation of Angola (FNL) led by Holden Roberto and backed by the Bakongo tribe in northern Angola, comprising about 20 per cent of the population.

The Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) is a Soviet-backed group led by Agostinho Neto and supported by the Mbundu tribe in central Angola, comprising about 25 per cent of the population.

MAO FAILING, REPORTS INSIST

HONG KONG (UPI) — Reports from diplomats in Peking and high-level visitors to China say the physical condition of Communist Party Chairman Mao Tse-Tung has deteriorated considerably in recent months.

The reports say the worsening condition of Mao, who turned 81 on December 26, has been causing concern among other top-ranking Chinese leaders.

Mao still seems fairly alert, according to the reports, but there are times when his mind appears to wander and he seems unable to concentrate fully.

The aging leader has to be helped about by medical aides constantly at his side. On occasions, he has needed help to dress his hand to welcome visitors.

There is much speculation among China analysts in Hong Kong and Peking about just how much longer Mao's health will permit him to receive foreign visitors.

There have been sporadic reports over the years of Mao's death with some even saying a double was being prepared for him. All the past reports proved to be erroneous.

But evidence has been piling up, despite public statements to the contrary, that Mao's health has been getting progressively worse in recent months.

DEEP COVE WATERWORKS DISTRICT WATER RESTRICTION NOTICE

The shortage of water on the entire peninsula forces the prohibition of non-essential water use — lawn sprinkling, car or boat washing, driveway washing, etc.

Awareness of economies in household usage is most desirable. Flagrant use or outright violation of water conservation during the balance of June and also during July and August, 1975, is punishable by law.

Saskatchewan Population Up

REGINA (CP) — Premier Allan Blakeney has announced that the Saskatchewan population increased by 8,000 in the 12 months ending March 31, bringing the total to 915,000.

The increase strengthened a trend that began with the announcement last fall of the province's first 12-month population increase in seven years. The peak population of 961,000 was reached in 1968.

Blakeney said the rate of increase seems to be increasing and if it continues the total population could reach 924,000 by the end of the year.

Indochina Seeking U.S. Arms

JAKARTA (WP) — Indonesia has quietly begun sounding out the United States for supply of sophisticated military equipment to help seal its borders against a feared influx of surplus arms from Indochina.

It has also warned Thailand not to be hasty in dismantling U.S. bases there.

The moves reflect a deep wariness that Indonesia, as a member of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, exhibits toward bringing the newly-Communist nations of Indochina into the organization.

Indonesia has particular reservations about the role of China in the newly peaceful Indochinese area.

And it is worried about the immense stocks of arms now idle in Vietnam and Cambodia, which had already been reported as trickling to insurgents in Thailand and Laos.

Leaders of this country do not Chinese protestations of noninterference in Southeast Asian domestic affairs, particularly because a significant number of Indonesia's four million residents of Chinese origin (in a population of 126 million) undoubtedly owe first loyalty to Peking.

A gradually relaxing attitude here toward China has suddenly stiffened a few weeks ago when Radio Peking broadcast a rousing anniversary message to the outlawed Indonesian Communist party, urging it to continue efforts to overthrow President Suharto.

The party was virtually crushed after a takeover attempt in 1965 and has been under repression since then.

Present U.S. military aid amounts to a few million dollars a year, much of it devoted to re-equipment of the armed forces.

Suharto is to meet with President Ford on July 5 at Camp David and it is thought likely that the military aid question will be taken up.

However, the presidents may prefer not to draw attention to the matter publicly. Suharto, with strong armed forces backing, seeks to strengthen his military posture and military by reopening relations with Peking.

Such a move may now be put off until after planned general elections in 1977 and Suharto appears convinced that security must be reinforced, with emphasis on patrolling the borders.

The defence minister and chief of the armed forces, Gen. Panggabean, is in Washington for hospital treatment and is understood to be sounding out the defence and state departments on increased military aid.

Reportedly Suharto agrees with the Thai and Filipino policies of winding down their U.S. bases. But he is said to be anxious that a strong U.S. presence — economic, business and aid — remain in the area. This apparently would include a naval presence.

The

Kelowna Housing Grant

The provincial government has approved a $1.2 million grant for a senior citizens housing project in Kelowna, Housing Minister Lorne Nicolson said Friday.

The grant to the Central Okanagan Kiwanis Community Services Society for a 12-storey high rise will add 146 units and house 182 occupants. Plans call for a two-storey commercial and professional building, including a medical clinic.

Nicholson said the grant approval was delayed a few months because the proposed rents were extremely high. But federal subsidies will likely be made available to ensure senior citizens do no pay more than 25 per cent of their income on rent, he said.

The provincial grant is one-third of the project's total cost.

LEVI REJECTS ADOPTION LIST

Human Resources Minister Norman Levi said Friday there will be no adoption reunion registry in B.C. as long as he is minister.

Responding to a question from Conservative leader Scott Wallace in the legislature, Levi said:

"As long as I'm minister it will not be instituted."

Wallace had asked whether in the light of strong protests by adoptive parents, and a recommendation against such a registry from the Berger commission into adoptions, he could assume the government would let the matter drop.

Proponents of the reunion registry would like it to be kept in the event there is a desire by one party to reunite an adopted child with his rightful parents, a situation which adoptive parents would find distressing.

Bill Lets Gov't Set Hospital Rate

The provincial government introduced legislation Friday to make it "crystal clear" the province has the power to set rates charged by private hospitals for care of welfare recipients.

The legislation comes one year after the Supreme Court of Canada ruled the provincial government lacked the authority to set rates and awarded $82,000 in damages to a private hospital in Vancouver.

"We want to make it crystal clear that the department of human resources through the Social Assistance Act has the authority for setting rates for welfare recipients," said Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall, who introduced the amendments.

The legislation would be retroactive to the date of the judgment ruling in favor of Parklane Private Hospital.

Human Resources Minister Norm Levi said nine private hospitals are negotiating an acceptable rate with the government.

Welfare Cheats Win-Levi

Transients do not receive welfare automatically but people who set out to beat the system do succeed, Human Resources Minister Norman Levi said in the legislature Friday.

He admitted during debate on his salary estimates that "people are travelling this country by the welfare of- fice."

Levi said those who set out to be welfare cheaters succeed because they go to elaborate lengths.

However, this should not obscure the large amount of legitimate good done through the welfare system, he said.

There had been better means of controlling welfare cheaters since recipients had been required to report personally to welfare offices for their cheques in many cases, Levi said.

Independent Pat McGeer (Pt. Grey) said it is "quite a game in Canada" for young people to go on the road with $2 in their pocket and "their first stop is the welfare office" in the next city they come to.

This is "quite clearly an abuse for a system intended for people in need," McGeer said, urging more control during the summer months.

He noted that last year, while Fraser Valley crops rotated for lack of pickers, a band of transients giving their address as Maple Ridge Park were picking up welfare cheques.

Levi was asked by Scott Wallace (PC-Oak Bay) what steps were being taken in cooperation with the federal government to allow for immigration to the province and to continue the program of relocating people unable to find work in B.C.

The minister said he appreciates B.C. is a province of "last resort" for some people unable to establish themselves in other provinces, which produces great cost to the municipalities in welfare payments.

He said it had been found that 50 per cent of persons receiving social assistance in B.C. have out-of-province social insurance numbers.

Also, 27 per cent of Canadian immigrants land in B.C., Levi noted, agreeing that more discussion with federal authorities is needed. B.C. needs to know who is coming, how many and when so that pressure on public services can be gauged, he said.

McGeer also asked whether Levi would be able to stay within his $560 million budget this year, "or are there going to be some slip-ups?" He referred to last year's $100 million over-run in social service spending.

Levi replied his department is operating on a more sophisticated tracking system for spending information, which at present provides figures with only a 4-6 week delay.

A nine-member team is busy at historic Point Ellice House finding out just what the provincial government got for the $445,000 it paid for the house last December.

Historian Michael Zarb and eight students will spend the summer going through trunks and attics and desk drawers, cataloguing everything in the 114-year-old house.

They've already got a list of 4,000 items, everything from tables to gravy boats, and expect to have double that number by the summer's end.

The house, home to three generations of O'Reilly's, sits on a two-acre waterfront site on Pleasant Street, a little street that runs off Bay Street just east of the Bay Street bridge.

John O'Reilly, grandson of Peter O'Reilly who built the house, still lives in it with his wife Inez.

They restored the house and opened it as a private museum in 1967, but rising costs forced them to sell the property to the government last year.

Mrs. O'Reilly has been retained by the government as curator.

The 15-room one-storey house is what one expert calls "a veritable storehouse of Victorian bric-a-brac".

In one room alone, the drawing room, there's an Italian white marble fireplace mantle, a gold harp, Brussels lace curtains, gold framed pictures of Queen Victoria, a hand carved ivory Chinese chess set, and much more.

One student is at work full-time in the attic, which is crammed with trunks, boxes full of letters and other items, and closets full of old clothes.

In the kitchen there's an incredible array of dishes, including a 135-piece set of china.

Zarb and his student workers have extended their search outside the house to a hill by the water's edge which was a garbage dump for the early O'Reilly's.

There the team has been conducting a proper archeological dig, digging up part of the bank in 50 square centimetre sections and carefully recording everything - and they find.

They've come up with many shards of pottery which are carefully washed and pieced together to restore the original dishes.

One Chinese bowl found in the dig is unlike any dishes found in the house.

Zarb thinks the government got its money's worth in Ellice House, not so much in the individual items in the house but in the total package.

The furniture and other items in Ellice House have a personal quality that is missing in most museums, he said, because we know about the people who lived in the house.

These are not impersonal antiques, but evidence of the life of the O'Reilly family, from Peter who came from Ireland in 1859, his children Frank, Arthur and Kathleen, and now John O'Reilly, the present tenant.

For example we can see a basket of embroidery implements in the house. We know it was Kathleen's, and we can see the embroidery she made with the implements, said Zarb.

Terry Eastwood of the Provincial Archives has been going through the many papers of the house, sorting those which are of archival value and must be preserved from those which could be put on display in the house.

Among the papers is a Christmas card signed by Queen Victoria, and some letters written from Sir John A. Macdonald to Sir Joseph Trutch, B.C.'s lieutenant-governor in 1871.

Trutch was brother-in-law to Peter O'Reilly, and the letters were found in Trutch's rosewood desk, which is in the morning room at Ellice Hall.

The cataloguing has Ellice House in something of a shambles, but the house is still open to visitors from 10 to 5 each day.

Admission has dropped from $1 to 25 cents since the government takeover.

Mayors Rap CPR As E&N Trimmed

Passenger and freight traffic on the E and N Railway between Parksville and Courtenay will halt in nine days because two old treaties on the 40-mile stretch can no longer be guaranteed safe.

A spokesman for CP Rail in Vancouver said today it would cost $1.7 million to replace the 19-year-old wooden bridges and revenue from the line doesn't justify that spending.

The surprise announcement has produced another storm of protest from spokesman in up-island communities who have lambasted the company in recent years for its Dayliner passenger service between Victoria and Courtenay.

CP Rail, owner of the E and N line, had earlier applied to the Canadian Transport Commission to discontinue the passenger service entirely, claiming it is a money loser. A date has not yet been set for a public hearing on that application.

The CTC would also have to approve before the Parksville-Courtenay stretch could be permanently abandoned.

The CP Rail spokesman said today that arrangements are being made with Vancouver Island Coach Lines to provide co-ordinated bus service over the Parksville-Courtenay link and details will be announced next week.

The rail lines' freight-pus-tomers are left to make their own alternate trucking or other transport arrangements.

The trestles involved are over French Creek and the Tsable River. The Dayliner, on a recently altered schedule, runs daily except Sunday and two freight trains a week have been using the line. About 1,000 freight cars travelled the line last year.

Freight and passenger service between Victoria and Parksville is not affected by the July 1 closure.

In Courtenay, Mayor William Moore said a special council meeting will consider the development.

It was "most annoying" CP Rail did not advise Island mayors when it met with them two months ago to discuss the Dayliner schedule. He said he finds it hard to believe the company didn't know until recently the section of the line was going to be closed.

"I think it's disgraceful they did not advise us before now ... the CPR better be prepared to reimburse the people of northern Vancouver Island for the many grievances they have received."

It was a disgraceful action by a very unpopular corporate citizen," said Cumberland mayor William Williams.

Cowichan MLA Karen Sanford said the latest development strengthens her position that the service should be a public railway.

Three Die, 11 Injured

In Victoria Hotel Fire

Howl
For Help

By HUMPHRY DAVY
and LIZ HUGHES

"I opened the door, but the hallway was on fire," 95-year-old Harold Dawson said. "It started to burn down the door. I opened the window and started to howl for help."

Dawson was one of the dozens of Royal Olympic Hotel guests who narrowly escaped perishing in this morning's fire.

He said a fireman took him down a ladder.

"It was terrible," he said. "I can't remember too much. Everything happened so quickly."

Bill Williams, 25, of Victoria, was in his sixth floor room studying when the fire alarm went off.

He said today he left his room quickly and made for the fire escape on the fifth floor while smoke and flames engulfed the building.

He said once the fire hit it was like an explosion.

"It was the screaming, that's one thing I can't stand. It was sickening, all those screaming people burning," Williams said.

Williams said once he got out of the hotel he didn't stick around to watch, but went for coffee to calm down and later a room was found for him in the Yates Hotel.

He said the fire wouldn't stop him from living in a hotel again: "I figure my number wasn't up."

Fred Wilson occupied a room on the seventh floor and was awakened by the alarm.

"I thought it was a false alarm — some damn drunk," he said. "I got dressed but when I went out of my room, I smelled smoke."

He said he went to the fire escape and found a man standing there afraid to go down the steel stairs.

"Now and again, smoke would billow up and he was afraid to go through the smoke," he explained. "When the smoke cleared for a moment, I told him to proceed, which he did. We got down all right."

He said from the street he could see a young man on the roof of the hotel screaming.

"They got him down," he said.

Angus Patterson, 75, a veteran seaman, said he knew exactly what to do when he was awakened in his fourth floor room.

"I wrapped a towel around my head and made my way down the stairs," he said. "It was getting pretty hot when I reached the main floor."

Harry Southcott, who escaped from his fifth floor room in his pyjamas, said the smoke awakened him.

In darkness, he groped his way down one of the main stairways but on the third floor the smoke and heat forced him back.

"We went to the fire escape and found several elderly ladies standing there," he said. "They were afraid to go down. They had to be encouraged down the iron stairs."

Fred Thompson, 87, said when he stepped out of his room on the fourth floor, "everything was in a turmoil."

"People were rushing here and there, some screaming," he said. "I was in my night-gown. I finally managed to get to the fire escape and get down."

Hotel guests said it was a wonder more people did not die in the fire as several elderly people were hard of hearing and others lost or forgot.

QUERIED

By IAIN HUNTER
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Canada should postpone its proposed sale of a nuclear reactor to South Korea until that country guarantees it will not be used to make nuclear weapons, Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield and Allan McKinnon (PC-Victoria) declared Friday.

Both pressed Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau in the Commons for assurances that no country would get the Candu reactor without first agreeing to strict safeguards against using it for non-peaceful purposes.

McKinnon questioned the wisdom of the proposed sale to South Korea which he called "one of the most heavily-armed, militaristic and unstable countries in the world."

Meanwhile, North Korea was put on public notice today that an atomic attack might be the price it would have to pay for an invasion of the South.

The warning was issued at a Washington news conference by Defence Secretary James Schlesinger.

If assessing Korea, he stopped short of brandishing an atomic bomb, but would not rule out its use, saying "We cannot foreclose any options."

U.S. Inflation Down

WASHINGTON (WP) —

The rate of inflation in the U.S. continued to abate in May, even though there were increases in the price of gasoline and heat, the Department of Labor reported Friday. The 0.4 per cent rise in the consumer price index was below the 0.6 per cent advance in April and well below the 1 per cent that consumer prices rose in May, 1974, when inflation was rising at a double-digit pace.

Three people were killed and 11 injured early this morning when fire raged through the Royal Olympic Hotel, 642 Johnson.

Victoria police identified two of the dead as Elizabeth Mae Towers, 20, of Trail, and Lorna Anne Minnes, 57, of Vancouver.

The name of the third — a 90-year-old man — is being withheld pending identification of next-of-kin.

The fire, which broke out in a second-floor room shortly before 2 a.m., quickly swept up an open stairwell engulfing the top floors of the seven-storey building.

Residents, awakened by thick smoke and intense heat were forced out of their rooms, many on to window ledges high above the street where they screamed for help.

An eyewitness said one man jumped from a third floor window to a roof 15 feet below, and was unhurt.

Others scrambled to safety down outside fire escapes and through smoke-filled hallways. But more than half the hotel's residents — estimated by manager Nick Renard at 55 — were rescued by firemen using ladders.

Victoria city police detective Ted James described the scene as hellish.

"It was a miracle the death toll wasn't much higher," he said.

Eleven of those rescued were taken to hospital suffering from smoke inhalation and burns.

Three were taken to Royal Jubilee — Douglas Mooney, 29, of Duncan, George Chen, 48, of Vancouver, and William Kinsey, 51, who lived in Room 513 at the hotel.

The others were taken to Victoria General and included James Minnes, 62, of Vancouver, and Donald Ferris Towers, 26, of Trail, husbands of the dead women; Helen Peterson, 41, of 1803 Fernwood, Mabel Lindstrom of Vancouver, Albert Martel, 58, of 2140 Gadsbrough, Olive Foulser, 49, and her husband Arthur, 54, both of St. Laurent, Quebec.

Mr. and Mrs. Foulser and Donald Towers were released following treatment for minor injuries.

Mooney, Chen and Kinsey are in satisfactory condition. Mrs. Lindstrom and Mrs. Peterson in good condition while Minnes, Smith and Martel are in fair condition.

It took 20 members of the Victoria fire department, assisted by an aerial truck from Oak Bay, more than an hour to bring the fire under control.

JAILHOUSE ROCKS

EL CENTRO, Calif. (UPI) — The Imperial Valley is quivering again. A swarm of 20 earthquakes shook the valley in a 29 hour period Thursday and Friday, setting off burglar alarms and bouncing the county jail, but doing no damage.

Swarms, as chains of quakes are called, are common here. Earlier this year the valley was shaken by a swarm of more than 1,000 quakes that lasted for days.

There were three tremors strong enough to be distinctly felt Thursday and three more Friday, accompanied by 14 smaller tremors.

Paving Inquiry Sought

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen and five other members of city council have formally requested an inquiry under the federal Combines Investigation Act into certain Victoria-area paving companies.

Pollen confirmed the action Friday on his return to City Hall from a vacation in Europe. During his absence, charges of uncompetitive bidding on municipal paving contracts were raised by Sanich council, and Mayor Ed Lum referred to a city request for a federal investigation.

In his brief statement to reporters on Friday, Pollen avoided mentioning the names of the companies involved in the complaint, but city sources indicated the firms are Victoria Paving Co. Ltd. and Ok Paving Co. Ltd., the two major contractors in this area.

The mayor said the formal application was submitted to the Combines Investigation branch in Ottawa some "five or six weeks ago," but as far as he's aware there has been no response or any indication of an inquiry into such matter.

The request, signed by himself and five aldermen, was for an inquiry into the practices of "certain asphalt paving production companies in this area which we consider are combining in restrictive trade," he said.

Young added: "There is no question we are concerned about the apparent lack of competition here... we are not getting competitive bids from the companies involved."

Section 7 of the Combines Investigation Act states that "any six persons... who are of the opinion that an offence under Part V has been or is about to be committed may apply to the Director for an inquiry into such matter."

Forest Union
Talks Break

VANCOUVER (CP) — Negotiations with two of three forest industry unions broke off Friday after the coastal companies refused to increase the wages of employees beyond extending cost-of-living adjustment clauses in their previous contract.

He said the industry is faced with the problem of reconciling economic and long-term security and "accommodating union demands."

Meanwhile the Tahsis Co. Ltd. announced Friday it will close all of its logging operations on the west coast of Vancouver Island for five weeks starting next Friday.

President J.V. Christensen said logging contractors working for the company firm have been advised to close during the same period as log inventories are in excess of current needs.

The announcement affects 350 company loggers but there was no estimate on how many are employed by contractors who are independent businessmen.
